TARA (Ireland).—At this place, in Meath, the Irish gained a great victory over the Danes, 978. The Hill of Tara was in ancient times the chief seat of the Irish kings. Here the insurgent Irish were defeated by the Royalists, May 26, 1780; and here a monster meeting of the "repealers," computed at 1,000,000 persons, according to the highest calculation, and 250,000 according to the highest car-culation, and 250,000 according to the lowest, was held by O'Connell, Aug. 15, 1843. TARANTO (Italy).—This town occupies the site of the acropolis or citadel of the ancient town of Tarentum (q, v_i) , and is situated on an island in the Gulf of Taranto. It was founded after the sacking of Tarentum by the Saracens in 8_{30} , was taken by Robert Guiscard in 1063, and from that time it formed part of the kingdom of Naples. It was taken by the French in April, 1801.

TARBES (France), anciently called Bigorra, was the capital of the country of Bigorre in the Middle Ages. The bishopric was founded in 420. It came into the possession of the English monarchs as part of the dowry of Queen Eleanor in 1152, and remained under their sway for 300 years. Edward the Black Prince occasionally resided here. The French were defeated here by the English, March 20,

TARENTUM (Italy) was founded by a Spartan colony, B.C. 708. Of its early history little is known. The forces of Tarentum and Rhegium were defeated by the Messapians, B.C. 473. It received a code of laws from Archytas about B.C. 400. Soon after the Tarentines, called "the Athenians of Italy," engaged in a war with the Thurians to prevent their occupying the district of the Siritis. The dispute was settled by the establishment of a joint colony named Heraclea in the contested territory. A war with their neighbours, the Lucanians, caused them to apply to Archi-Lucanians, caused them to apply to Archi-damus, King of Sparta, for assistance. He landed B.C. 346, and was defeated and slain B.C. 338. They then sought the aid of Alex-ander of Epirus, who arrived B.C. 332, and, after defeating the enemies of Tarentum, turned against his allies and took Heraclea. Alexander died B.C. 326, and the Tarentines again applied to Sparta for aid, B.C. 305, when Cleonymus came to their assistance, and compelled the Lucanians and Messapians to sue for peace. The Tarentines made a treaty with Rome, by which vessels of that nation were not permitted to enter the Gulf of Tarentum. It was violated when a Roman fleet was sent to assist the Thurians, B.C. 282. The Tarentines attacked the fleet and destroyed and captured five vessels, and then took Thurium and expelled the Roman garrison. War was declared against them by the Romans B.C. 281, and the Tarentines applied to Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, for assistance. Though at first general, Milo, to protect Tarentum, which surrendered to the Romans B.C. 272. In the second Punic war, Tarentum was seized by Hannibal, B.C. 212. The citadel, however, held out, and the Carthaginian general, who in vain endeavoured to take it by storm, blockaded it for two years. Fabius came to the assistance of the Romans, took the city, and put the Carthaginian garrison and a large number of the inhabitants to the sword, B.C. 209. A treaty between Marcus Antonius and Octavius Cæsar, concluded at Tarentum B.C. 37, led to the renewal of the triumvirate for five led to the renewal of the trium-virace for new years, between Marcus Antonius, Octavius Cæsar, and Lepidus. Tarentum, taken by Belisarius, was recaptured by Totila in 540, and continued in the hands of the Goths till captured by Narses in 553. The Lombards took it in 661. The Saracens landed at Tarentum in 830.

TARGOWITZ CONFEDERATION was formed at Targowitz, in Kiev, May 14, 1792, by five Polish nobles, partisans of Russia, who pretended to object to the constitution of May 3, 1791, and demanded the restoration of the constitution of 1775. They were instigated by Catherine II., and on the exposure of their intrigues took refuge in Russia. It furnished a pretext for the second partition of Poland.

TARIFA (Spain) .- The Joza of the Carthaginians, and the Julia Traducta, or Transducta, of the Romans, a scaport deriving its name from Tarif Ibn Malik, who landed here when sent by Musa, the Mussulman emir, to reconnoitre before his invasion from Africa, in 712. It was taken by Sancho IV. in 1292, and was held by Alonzo Perez de Guzman against the Moors in 1294. He would not surrender it, though they threatened to behead his only son, and actually carried out the threat before his eyes. The kings of Castile and of Portugal gained a great victory here over the Moors, Oct. 28, 1340, when the latter were besieging the town. It was successfully defended by 1,800 English and 700 Spaniards against a French force 13,000 strong, from Dcc. 19, 1811, to Jan. 4, 1812, when the French raised the siege, having lost about 1,000 men. The French took it in 1823.

TARIFF.-These duties were originally granted for the use of the king, as is shown by 25 Edw. I. c. 7 (1296). They were contained in two books till 27 Geo. III. c. 13 (1786), when all the duties were ordered to be paid according to a new book of rates an-nexed to that statute. The English tariff has undergone several important alterations during the present century. It was much simplified, and the duty on a great number of articles abolished, by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842), by 3 Vict. c. 12 (May 8, 1845), by 23 Vict. c. 22 (May 15, 1860), and by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 110 (Aug. 28, 1860).

TARPEIAN ROCK (Rome).—According to the legend Tarpein, the daughter of the

the legend, Tarpeia, the daughter of the governor of the citadel of Rome, surren-dered it to the Sabines, who were advancing against Romulus (B.C. 722) to avenge the abduction of the Sabine virgins—on condition of receiving the gold bracelets they wore upon their left arms. Titus Tatius. the Sabine king, to punish her perfidy, as he entered the gates, east not only his bracelet, but his shield upon her. This example was followed by his soldiers, and Tarpeia was crushed to death. Tarpeia was buried in the capitol, and the rock, from which traitors were afterwards hurled, received her name. TARQUINII Italy).—This city of Etruria, of which the site is occupied by Corneto, is believed to have been the metropolis of the beneved to have been the metropoles of the Etrusean League. The inhabitants joined with the Vcientes in an attempt to restore the exiled Tarquins, B.C. 509, ravaged the Roman territory B.C. 398 and B.C. 358, and defeated the Romans in a great battle, and put 307 of the prisoners to death in the Forum. The Romans, in revenge for this massacre, put to death in their Forum 358 of the inhabitants of Tarquinii, whom they had captured in battle B.C. 358. A truce of 40 years, between Rome and Tarquinii, was concluded B.C. 351. After several contests, they became allies of Rome, and were admitted to full rights B.c. 90.

TARRAGONA (Spain) was originally settled by the Phoenicians, who called it Tarchon, and it became a Roman colony under the name of Tarraco, during the second Punic war (B.C. 218—B.C. 202), when it was enlarged and fortified. It was made the capital of a provinee by the Emperor Augustus, was taken by the Visigoths in 467, and by the Moors in 714. They completely destroyed it, and it remained in ruins for four centuries. Councils were held here in 464; Nov., 6, 516; May 1, 1230; heid here in 404; NOV., 0, 510; Any 1, 1232; in April 10, 1239; May 8, 1240; May 13, 1242; in 1244; May 1, 1247; in 1248; April 8, 1253; March 22, 1282; in 1294; Feb. 22, 1305; in 1307; and Feb. 22, 1317. The town, rebuilt in the beginning of the 12th century, was taken by Alphonso of Arragon in 1220, sustaken tained a siege during the revolt of Catalonia in 1640, was captured by the English in 1705, but afterwards abandoned by them, and was taken by the French, June 7, 1808, and again June 29, 1811. The English, having attempted to retake it in the end of July, 1813, raised the siege Aug. 17, on the approach of the French, under Marshal Suchet, who destroyed the fortifications Aug. 18. It surrendered to the French in the Spanish revolutionary war in June, 1823

TARSHISH, or THARSHISH.—It is considered probable that the references to Tarshish in the Scriptures point to two distinct emporiums, one situated at the extremity of the Mediterranean, and the other in the Indian Ocean. Tartessus, in Spain, is supposed to have been the western, and Point de Galle, in Ceylon, the eastern Tarshish. The prophet Ezekiel, writing in the 6th century B.c., describes Tarshish as the "Mcrchant of Tyre by reason of the multitude of all riches." Tyre by reason of the munitude of an inches. It was celebrated for its gold nimes (z Chron. ix. 21.) "The ships of Tarshish" (Smith's History of the World, vol. ii. ch. xxiv) "doubtless became, like our East-India-men, a generic name for the largest ships of their commercial marine."

TARSUS (Asia Minor), the metropolis of Cilicia, is said to have been founded by Sar[959]

danapalus, B.C. 820. Rawlinson believes it to have been founded by Sennacherib, King of Assyria, between the years B.C. 688-B.C. 680. It was a great and flourishing city when taken and plundered by the younger Cyrus, B.C. 401. Alexander III., the Great, who took it B.C. 333, was detained here some time with a dangerous fever. In the war between Cæsar and Pompeius (B.C. 47), Tarsus sided with the former, and took the name of Juliopolis. Cleopatra visited Marcus Antonius here, sailing up the Cydnus in great state, B.C. 41. It was made a free city by Augustus. The was made a free city by Augustus. The apostle Paul, born about the year 4 ("Saul of Tarsus," Acts ix. 11, and xxi. 39), was a native of the city. It was seized by the Saracens in the early days of their rule, but was taken from them, after an obstinate resistance, in the second half of the 10th century. Soon afterwards it was restored to them, and has remained under their sway ever since. Councils mained under their sway ever since. Councils were held here in Nov., 431; in 435; and 1177.

TARTARIC ACID, first discovered in a separate state by Scheele, who was born at Stralsund, in Sweden, Dec. 19, 1742, and died at Kioping, May 24, 1786. Liebig formed tartaric acid by artificial means in 1859.

TARTARS, or TATARS,—According to Pritchard, the Tatars, or Tartars, were a tribe prophyrallied to the Mogorals in was when duelt nearly allied to the Mongols in race, who dwelt near Lake Bouyir, to the eastward of Mongolia. They were among the first to fall beneath the Mongol sway, and they took afterwards so conspicuous a place in the army of Zingis Khan, that their name became synonymous with that of the Mongols. Their proper name was Tatars. It is said to have been changed into Tartar in consequence of an expression of Louis IX. (1226—70), who, when the devasta-tions of Zingis Khan were heard of with horror in western Europe, is reported to have ex-claimed, "Erigat nos, mater, celeste sola-tium, quia si proveniant ipsi, vel nos ipsos quos vocamus Tartaros ad suas Tartareas sodes, unde exierunt, retrudemus, vel ipsi nos omnes ad celum advehant." (See Alani, Calmucks, Cossacks, Mongols, &c.) TARTARY (Asia).—This tract of country, bounded on the north by Russia, on the east by China, on the south by Affghanistan and Persia, and on the south by Anghanistan and Persia, and on the west by the Caspian Sea, was conquered by Toulun, who assumed the title of Khan of Tartary about 405. The name of Tartary has disappeared from geography, and the greater part of the country is called Turkestan, or Turkistan.

TASMANIA (Australia).—This island, for-merly called Van Diemen's Land, was discovered by Tasman, Dec. 1, 1642, and named after Van Diemen, the governor of the Dutch East India settlements. The coast was explored by Marion, Furneaux, Cook, Bruné, d'Entrecasteaux, and Kermandee, between 1772 and 1792, and the island was taken possession of by the English for a penal settlement, in connection with the penal head-quarters at Sydney, in Aug., 1803. Collins landed with a party of convicts Feb. 19, 1804, and founded Hobart Town, of which he was the first governor. He died in 1810. It became a distinct colony in 1825. The bishopric of Tasmania was founded in 1842. An anti-transportation society was formed in 1851. Their efforts to abolish transportation were successful in 1853, and by permission of Queen Victoria its name was changed from Van Diemen's Land to Tasmania. The present system of self-government was established in 1855 and 1856. Guano was found on the islands in the neighbourhood in April, 1861.

TATTERSALL'S (London), situated near St. George's Hospital, was opened in 1779, by Richard Tattersall, who died in 1795. The premises were required for improvements, and a new establishment at Brompton was opened April 10, 1865.
TAUNTON (N. America).—This town in Massachusetts was founded in régr.

TAUNTON (Somersetshire), originally called Tantun, and subsequently Tawnton and Thoneton, from its situation on the river Thone, is supposed to have been a Roman station, Ina, king of Wessex, built a castle here in 700. It was destroyed by his queen, Ethelburga, in 722, and remained in ruins till the reign of William I., when it was rebuilt by the bishops of Winchester, to whom the town and manor were granted. A priory was built in 1127, and a leper-house in 1269. Taunton was taken in 1497 by Perkin Warbeck, who abandoned it on 1497 by Ferkin Warbeek, who abandoned it on the approach of the Royal troops. Col., after-wards Admiral Blake, defended it against 10,000 Royalists, until relieved by Fairfax, in 1645. James, Duke of Monmouth, was pro-claimed king here, June 20, 1685, and many of his followers were put to death by Gen. Kirke, Aug. 27. (See BLOODY Assizes.) A charter, granted in 1627, was taken away at the Restoration (1666), and its walls were razed to the ground in consequence of the zeal displayed by the inhabitants for the Parliament. The by the inhabitants for the Furnament. The charter, subsequently restored, was forfeited in 1792. Taunton has returned two members to Parliament since 1625. The church of St. Mary Magdalen, built in the 14th century, was richly decorated by Henry VII., in return for the support given by the town to the Lancas-trian cause. The free grammar-school was founded in 1522, and endowed in 1554. The almshouses at East Gate were founded in 1635; the hospital was commenced in 1809, and opened March 25, 1812; and the eye infirmary was established in 1816. The canal between Taunton and Bridgewater, projected in 1811, added much to the prosperity of the town. The museum, library, &c., were erected in 1821, and the Taunton and Somerset Institution was established in 1823. The railway from Bristol to Exeter was opened as far as Taunton in July, 1842.

TAURIS.—(See BAZAAR, TABRIZ, &c.)
TAUROMENIUM (Sicily), the modern Taormina, was founded by the remaining inhabitants of Naxos, who were driven into exile after the destruction of that town by Dionysius I., B.C. 396. It was ineffectually besieged by Dionysius I., B.C. 394, and submitted to him B.C. 392. It is believed to have become a Greek city when Andromachus, father of the historian Timæus, having collected the exiled Naxians who were scattered over the island, settled them here, B.C. 358. It had risen to a considerable degree of opulence, when Timoleon landed, B.C. 345, and was incorporated with the kingdom of Syracuse shortly after B.C. 278. Having passed with the island under Roman domination, it was held by the insurgent slaves, and suffered severely B.C. 134-132. Sextus Pompeius made it one of his chief strongholds of defence against Octavius Cæsar, and gained an important naval victory over him, B.C. 36. Octavius Cæsar expelled its former inhabitants, and settled a Roman colony in their place, B.C. 35.

TAUSS (Battle).—The Hussites defeated the Imperialists near this town, in Bohemia, Aug.

14, 1431. TAVERNS. — Places where wine was sold can be traced in England to the 13th century. At first no eating was provided at taverns, wine only being sold. They were ordered to be closed at curfew by 1; Edw. I. c. 5, (1284). The oldest tavern in London is said to have been the "Boar's Head," in Eastcheap, where Shakespeare represents Prince Henry and his dissolute companions indulging in their revels, before 1413. The "White Hart" tavern, in Bishopsgate Street, was established in 1480. The number was limited in London to 40, and in Westminster to three, by 7 Edw. VI. c. 5 (1553), in consequence of complaints having been made of their great increase, "to the hurt and debauching of the morals of the people." Taverns were first licensed in 1752. TAVIE'S INN .- (See THAVIE'S INN.)

TAVISTOCK (Devonshire).—The abbey was founded in 961. It has returned two members to the House of Commons since 1295. Sir Francis Drake was born in the neighbourhood in 1545. The canal was completed in 1817.

TAVOY (Burmah), the chief town of the province of Tavoy, in Tenasserim, surrendered to the English in 1824.

TAXATION.—The Greeks and Romans possessed systems of taxation almost as comprehensive and varied as those which exist at present. On the dccline of the Roman empire the feudal system of personal service was introduced. The modern institution of taxes originated in the practice of compounding for feudal service by payments of money. Immunity from arbitrary taxation was established by 25 Edw. I. cc. 5 & 6 (1297), and by the Bill of Rights, 1 Will. & Mary, sess. 2, c. 2 (1689). (See Customs, Excise, Income and Property Tax, Land Tax, Stamp Duties, &c.) TCHAD, or TSAD (Africa).—This lake, in the central regions of the continent, 120 miles in length, with an average breadth of about 70, was discovered and partly explored by Clap-perton and Denham in 1823. Overweg (who died here Sep. 27, 1852) and Barth made further explorations in 1851, and Dr. Vogel and Gen. della Marmora, on the banks of this river, near Sebastopol, in the Crimea, Aug. 16, TCHERNIGOV, or CZERNIGOF (Russia), capital of the province of that name, the oldest town in the European portion of the empire, was built in 1024. The Tartars took it in 1239, and massacred the inhabitants.

TCHESME (Sea-fight).-The Turkish fleet was destroyed by the Russians, near this small town of Anatolia, in Asia Minor, in July, 1770. TEA.—The tea-plant, supposed to be indigenous in China, according to their writers, was first discovered in the 8th century. An impost was levied on tea by the Emperor Te-Tsang, in 781. Japanese writers maintain that it was brought there from China in the oth century. The culture of the tea-plant was introduced into Brazil in 1815, and it was discovered in India in 1823. (See Assam.) It was introduced into Europe by the Dutch in 1591, and was used in England, on rare occasions, some years prior to 1657, and sold at from £6 to £10 the pound. Thomas Garway, the first English tea-dealer, retailed it in 1657, to the public, in the leaf, at from 152, to 508, the pound, and also in the infusion. (See Garraway's Coffee House.) It was first imported by the East India Company in 1677, when they received from China 4,713 pounds, which glutted the market for several years. Green tca was first used in England in 1715. A duty of 8d. per gallon on all ready-made tea prepared for sale gallon on all ready-made tea prepared for sale was imposed by 12 Charles II. c. 22 (1660), and the leaf was first taxed by 1 Will. & Mary, sess. 2, c. 6 (1689), which imposed a duty of 5*, per pound, and 5 per cent. on the value. By 10 Geo. I. c. 10 (1723), the duty was reduced to 4*, per lb.; and by 18 Geo. II. c. 26 (1745), it was again reduced to 1*, per lb. and £25 per cent. on the value. All previous duties were repealed by 24 Geo. III. sess. 2, c. 38 (1784), which effected an average reduction of 1-24. which effected an average reduction of 1061 which effected an average reduction of 166½ per cent. by imposing a window-tax. The duty was nearly doubled by 35 Geo. III. c. 13 (March 16, 1795); and by 59 Geo. III. c. 13 (July 2, 1819), it was raised to £96 per cent. on tea worth less than 28. per lb., and to £100 per cent. on tea above that price. Those ad valorem duties were repealed by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 101 (Aug. 29, 183), which ordered that, after April 22, 1834, rates of 18. 6d., 28. 2d., and 38. per lb. should be charged on teas, according to the quality. This arrangement proving to the quality. to the quality. This arrangement proving unsatisfactory, owing to the difficulty of deciding the quality of the article, an equal duty of 2s. 1d. on every lb. of tea imported was imof 28, 1d. on every lb, of tea imported was imposed by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 23 (Aug. 21, 1835). An addition of 5 per cent. was imposed by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17 (June 19, 1840). By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 106 (Aug. 20, 1853), it was arranged that till April 5, 1854, the duty should be 18, 10d. per lb.; that it should then remain at 18, 6d. till April 5, 1855, when it was to be reduced to 18, 2d.; and after April 5, 1856, to 18, per lb. In consequence of the expenses attending the Russian war, these provifurther explorations in 1851, and Dr. Vogel in 1854.

TCHERNAYA (Battle).—The Russians, under Gen. Liprandi, were defeated by the is. 6d.; and by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 21 (May 25, French and Sardinians, under Marshal Pelissier 1855), it was increased to 18. 9d. It was reduced to 18, 5d, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 61 (Aug. 25, 1857). It was fixed at rs. per lb. till Aug. 1, 1864, by 26 Vict. c. 22 (June 8, 1863), and continued at the same till Aug. 1, 1865, by 27 Vict. c. 17 (May 13, 1864). TEARLESS VICTORY, gained by the Spartans under Archidamus over the Arcadians and Argives, B.C. 367. Thirlwall (ch. xl.) says, "Of the Lacedemonians, according to the report which Archidamus sent home, not a man was killed, and hence the engagement became celebrated as the Tearless Battle. same author adds, "The news of the victory, which would once have made but little impression at Sparta, drew tears of joy from Agesi-laus, the senators, and the Ephors."

TE DEUM, a kind of hymn, or song of thanks, supposed to have been composed by St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo (395—430), and St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan (374—97), is sung in the Romish Church with extraordinary pomp and solemnity upon the gaining of a battle or other happy event. Some authorities contend that it was not composed till the end of the 5th century. It was also sung in Pro-testant churches on days of thanksgiving for a victory, peace, or other national event. Te Deum was performed at St. Paul's cathcdral when Queen Anne went in state to give thanks for the victory of Blenheim in 1704; and one was performed there, with vocal and instru-mental music, on the thanksgiving day for the battle of Ramillies, in ryo6. This was the first time an instrumental band was permitted to accompany the voices in St. Paul's. Handel's Te Deum for the battle of Dettingen, in 1743, and Graun's for the King of Prussia's victory at Kolin, in 1757, are celebrated compositions.

TEETH.—The Mathematical Jewel, published in 1585, contains an account of one Sir John Blagrave, "who caused his teeth to be all drawne out, and after had a sett of ivory teeth in agayne." Artificial teeth were in common use in England in 1609. (See Odontology.)

TEETOTALLER.—This term was first used in Sep., 1833, by Richard Turner, a working-man of Preston, in addressing temperance meetings, to describe his thorough abstinence meetings, to describe in the total abstraction from intoxicating beverages.

TEFLIS, or TIFLIS (Asia), the capital of Georgia, and of all the Transcaucasian provinces of Russia, was built by Vachtang, the founder of a dynasty which ruled from the Euxine to the Caspian in 469. It was taken by Tamerlane in 1386, and by the Turks in 1576, and again in 1723. Nadir Shah retook it in 1734, and it was captured and destroyed by 1734, and it was captured and destroyed by Aga Mohammed in 1795. The Russians became masters of it in 1801. It was devastated by the cholera in 1830. An insurrection, which was soon suppressed, broke out June 27, 1865.

TEGEA (Greece), one of the most powerful cities of Arcadia, is said to have been founded by Tegeates, a son of Lycaon, and is mentioned by Homer in connection with the siege feated in an attempt to acquire dominion over it, and Charillus, their king, and all the survivors of the army, made prisoners, B.C. 850. It submitted to Sparta B.C. 560. A contingent of 500 men fought at Thermopylæ B.C. 480, and one of 3,000 at the battle of Platæa, B.C. 479. Leotychides, King of Sparta, found refuge here B.C. 469, and Pausanias B.C. 304. An inde-cisive battle was fought with the inhabitants of Mantinea B.C. 423. In the Cleomenic war it was taken by Antigonus Doson, and annexed to the Achæan League B.C. 222. It was completely destroyed by Alaric I. about 400.

TEGYRA (Battle). — The Thebans, under Pelopidas, gained a victory over the Lacedæmonians at this village of Bœetia, B.C. 375.

TEHERAN, or TEHRAN (Persia), first noticed in the 12th century, was, till the end of the 18th century, an insignificant town. In the neighbourhood are the ruins of the ancient Rhages, the capital of the Parthian kings, where Alexander III. halted five days in his pursuit of Darius III., B.C. 330. It was made the metropolis of the empire by Aga Mohammed Khan about 1790. A body of French engineers was sent here by Napoleon I. in 1807, to organize the military resources of Persia. The Russian minister was assassinated here Feb. 12, 1829. A cotton factory was established in 1859.

28, r64r. / TEIGNMOUTH (Devonshire), for some time an insignificant village, is said to have been the first landing place of the Danes in England in 787. It contributed seven ships towards the expedition against Calais in 1347. The town, burned by a French pirate in 1350, was plundered in July, 1690, by the French, who also burned 116 houses, with a number of ships and small craft in the harbour. Being threatened with a similar attack in 1744, the inhabitants obtained permission to erect a fort on the beach at East Teignmouth. A market and fair were granted the town in the reign of Henry III. (1216-72). The school for the gratuitous instruction of poor children was founded in 1731. The quay was constructed in 1820.

TELA.—(See MEDINA DE RIO SECO.)

TELAMON (Italy).-This city of Etruria is first mentioned B.C. 225, as the scene of the defeat by the Romans of the Cisalpine Gauls. Marius landed here on his return from exile. B.C. 87. It was in existence as late as the 4th century, but from this time all trace of it disappears till the 14th century, when a castle was built on its site.

TELEGRAPH. - The word telegraph. from τηλε, at a distance, and γραφω, I write, signifies any method of communicating intelsignmes any meaned of communicating intelligence to a distance by means of visible signals, and was brought into use about 1793. The ancients employed fire and flags for the purpose. Polybius (B.C. 204-B.C. 122) states that of Troy, B.C. 1184. The Spartans were de- a rude system of telegraphy had been invented by Cleoxenes and Demoelitus, and improved by himself. The Marquis of Worcester deseribes some ingenious telegraphic inventions of his own in the "Century of Inventions" in 1663. Dr. Hooke described a clever plate telegraph, May 21, 1684, but no practical advantage was taken of the invention until Chappe, was taken of the invention until Chappe, in 1793, introduced a system of semaphore telegraphs in France. In 1801 John Boaz, of Glasgow, patented a nocturnal telegraph. In 1806 a new plan was adopted, and in 1816 Sir Home Popham introduced great improvement. The same labels of these telegraphs are ments. The principle of these telegraphs was the same as that of the various semaphore signals employed on railways. The construction and maintenance of telegraphs is regulated by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 112 (July 28, 1852), amended by 29 Vict. c. 3 (March 6, 1866). (See ATLANTIC, ELECTRIC, and SUBMARINE TELEGRAPHS, LATI-TUDE and LONGITUDE, &c.) TELEPHONE was invented by Reis in 1861.

TELESCOPE is said to have been invented by Zacharias Jansen, an optician of Middleburg, in 1590. Another account assigns the discovery to 1610; and Hallam states that the date of the invention, or at least of its publicity, is referred beyond dispute to 1609. Others ascribe the invention to Adrian Mctius, at Alkmaar, about 1607. Galileo heard of the discovery while at Venice in May, 1609, and from the description constructed an instrument, with which he discovered the four satellites of Jupiter, Jan. 7—13, 1610, and the phases of Venus in Sep. The astronomical telescope was greatly improved by Huyghens about 1655. James Gregory published sug-gestions for forming a telescope on a new plan in 1663. Newton made one on this prineiple, which is known as the Gregorian telescope, and completed his reflecting telescope in 1672. The latter was improved by Dr. Hooke in 1674, and by Hadley in 1718. Achromatic telescopes were made by Chester Moore in 1729. Sir William Herschel perfected the reflecting telescope, and commenced one of the Newtonian kind in the end of 1783, which was finished Aug. 28, 1789. The Dialytic telescope was invented by Rodger in 1828. Lord Rosse's monster reflecting telescope, erected at Birr Castle, near Parsonstown, Ireland, was finished in 1844. TELLURIUM, a scarce metal discovered by Müller, of Reichenstein, in Germany, in 1782. Klaproth, who, about 1798, ascertained its properties more minutely, gave it the name it now bears.

TEMESWAR (Hungary), the capital of the Banat, is supposed to be identical with the ancient Tibiscus, to which Ovid was banished in 8. It was taken and sacked by the Turks in in 8. It was taken and sacked by the Turks in 1552, in whose possession it remained till 1716, when it was regained by Prince Eugène, and strongly fortified. It was ceded to Austria by the treaty of Passarowitz (q. v.), July 21, 1718, and incorporated with Hungary in 1778. The Hungarians besieged it in April, 1849; but it was bravely defended by Gen. Rukawina for 107 days, when the garrison were relieved by Gen. Hungarian. Gen. Haynau. He defeated the Hungarian army in a well-contested battle, Aug. 10, and entered the town in the evening.

TEMPE (Greece), the ancient name of a beautiful valley in Thessaly, between Mounts Olympus and Ossa, through which the waters of the Peneius force their way into the sea. When Xerxes invaded Greece, B.C. 480, the Greeks sent a force of 10,000 men to Tempe, to defend the pass against the Persians; but having learnt that there was another pass across Mount Olympus into Thessaly, they withdrew to Thermopylæ. The Romans, under Q. Marcius Philippus, dislodged Perseus, King of Macedon, from a position here, and opened the pass B.C. 169.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.—The first society on the principle of entire abstinence from spirits was established at Moreau, in North America, in 1806. The next was the American Temperance Society, founded at Boston Feb. 13, 1826. A thousand societies were in existence in the United States at the end of 1829. A society was founded at New Ross, in Wexford, Ireland, in Aug., 1829. The Glasgow and West of Scotland Association was formed Nov. 12, 1829; and the society at Bradford, in Yorkshire, in Feb., 1830. The British and Foreign Temperance Society was organized in London June 29, 1831, by which time societies had been formed in the chief towns throughout the kingdom. The Preston society was the first to adopt a pledge renouncing "all liquors of an intoxicating quality," in March, 1833. The British Tcetotal Society was formed in London in 1835, and this was merged into the New British and Foreign Society for the Suppression of Intemperance, Aug. 20, 1836. The Sons of the Phonix, a teetotal friendly society, was instituted in 1839. Old partial abstinence societies were either dissolved or joined the new movement, and the exertions of the Rev. Father Mathew in Ireland in 1839, 1840, and 1841, and in England in 1843, gave an impetus to the movement. The parent societies of London were merged in the National Temperance Society in June, 1843. The Maine Liquor law in America was passed June 2, 1851. The London Temperanee League was formed in July, 1851, and the United Kingdom Allianee, for the legislative suppression of the Amance, for the registative suppression of the traffic in intoxicating drinks, was founded at Manchester June 1, 1853. (See TEETOTALLER.)
TEMPLARS, or KNIGHTS OF THE TEMPLE, first called the "Poor of the Holy City," and then "Poor Soldiers of the Temple of Solomon," abbreviated into Templars, in-stituted for the protection of pilgrims to the Holy Sepulchre, by Baldwin II., King of Jeru-salem, in 1118 or 1119, were established on a permanent basis by Honorius II., in 1128, and Alexander III. authorized priests to join as chaplains in 1162. Jerusalem was the head province and residence of the grand master till 1187, Antioch till 1191, and Acre till 1217. The Templars took refuge in the town of Limisso or Limesol, in Cyprus, when the Latin power was destroyed in Palestine in 1922. Philip IV. of France assisted Clement V. to the papal chair in 1925, on the understanding that he would lend him his aid in destroying the order. Jaques de Molay, their grand master, was summoned to Europe to consult with the Pope concerning the union of the Templars and Hospitallers in 1306. Grave accusations were made against them, nearly all the knights in France, including De Molay, were seized; and their stronghold in Paris was taken by Philip IV., Sep. 13, 139. The knights of England were thrown into prison by Edward II. in Dec., 1309. Pope Clement V. issued a bull requiring all authorities to aid him in discovering the guilt of the accused, in Aug., 1308; and a commission of ecclesiastics met at Paris to try the case Aug. 7, 1309. Cruel tortures extracted so-called confessions from the accused in France, many of whom were condemned to the flames in 1309. Fiftywere condemned to the flames in 1309. Fifty-four, who had been entrapped by Philip IV. into making confessions, and afterwards retracted, were burned in a field behind the abbey of St. Antoine, May 13, 1310. Clement V., in a secret consistory at Vienne, abolished the order by his own authority, April 3, 1312. The bull was formally published May 2. On a small island of the Seine, near the site occupied by the statue of Henry IV., De Molay, grand master, and Guy, grand prior of Normandy, were burned to death, March 18, 1314. Philip IV. seized most of their property. In England their landed possessions were given to the Hospitallers in 1311, and the statute authorizing the transfer was passed in 1323. In Portugal the society took the name of the Order of Christ. In Spain their property was given to the knights of Our Lady of Montesa, a society founded in 1317. The chief seat of the order in England was the Temple, whither they removed from Holborn in 1185.

TEMPLE (London).—A house was founded here by the Knights Templars in 1185, when the church was commenced, the chancel having been consecrated in 1240. It was called the New Temple, and was purchased and formed into inns of court after the suppression of the order in 1311. In consequence of the number of students, it was divided into the Inner and Middle Temple in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). The Outer Court was founded in 1560, and the Middle Temple Hall was built in 1572. The library was founded by Robert Ashley in 1641. The church was repaired in 1828. The new library of the Middle Temple, erected at a cost of £14,000, from designs by H. R. Abraham, was opened by the Prince of Wales, who was, on the occasion, called to the bar and admitted as bencher, Oct. 31, 1861.

TEMPLE BAR (London) was erected by Sir Christopher Wren, 1670—1672. The first head exhibited on Temple Bar was that of Sir T. Armstrong, executed for his share in the Rye House Plot, in 1683. The last is said to have fallen during a storm in 1772. A petition for the removal of Temple Bar was presented by certain merchants and others of the city of London to the lord mayor and corporation, in TENBY (Pembrokeshire) was built by Flemish settlers, who sought refuge from the inunda-tions of the Low Countries, about 1108. Its fortifications were strengthened on the approach of the Spanish Armada in 1588. It was garrisoned for Charles I. and besieged by the Parliamentarian forces in 1643, and again in 1648. A new fish-market was opened in 1847. The Albert memorial was inaugurated Aug. 2, 1865.

TENEDOS (Ægean Sea).-This island, off the coast of Troas, originally called Leucophrys, from its white cliffs, an Æolian settlement, was sacked by Achilles and occupied by the Greeks stacked by Aemies and occupied by the creeks after the siege of Troy, B.C. 1784. It became subject to Persia B.C. 493, and siding with Athens in the Peloponnesian war, paid an annual tribute of 3,426 drachmae B.C. 431. The Lacedemonians invaded it B.C. 389. The island threw off the Persian yoke about B.C. 331. Justinian I. (527-65) caused granaries to be erected to receive the supplies of Egyptian corn.

The endowment providing only for the maintenance of a librarian, and not for the purchase of books, the institution declined in importance on the death of its founder; but in 1835 a committee was appointed, by whom it has been restored. It was the first public library in London.

The English fleet, under Monk, gained a victory here over the Dutch, under Van Tromp, who fell in the action, Aug. 9, 1653. Another was fought with doubtful results between the combined fleets of England and France and the Dutch in 1673. A Dutch fleet, in a state of insubordination, surrendered to the English fleet here, Aug. 30, 1799. Part of Napoleon's immense army for the invasion of England occupied Texel in Aug., 1805. The sea broke down the dykes of the Texel, and laid the greater portion of the TEXTS.—In the early church the text was most commonly taken from some paragraph of the Psalms or Lessons. Elfric, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, required the priest on Sunday to explain the Gospel of the day, the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, about 957. Preaching from a text in England appears to have originated in 1204, with Stephen Langton, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, though some continued to preach without texts as late as the 15th century.

THAMES (England), the Roman Tamesa or Tamesis, was crossed by Julius Cæsar after he had routed the Britons under their King Cassivellaunus, B.C. 54. The Northmen entered it with 350 ships, took Canterbury and London by storm, and were afterwards defeated at Ockley by the West Saxons, in 851. The first stone bridge across the river was commenced by Peter Colman in 1176. Extraordinary floods occurred in 1235; Feb. 16, 1736 (when counsel were carried out of Westminster Hall to their carriages in boats); June 4, 1767 (on which occasion the water reached Kennington Common); March 5, 1828; Nov. 2, 1833; and Jan. 29, 1834 (requiring watermen to convey people from street to street). The conservancy from Staines to Yenlade was assured to the from Staines to Tennade was assured to the city of London in 1489. It was frozen over and fairs held upon the ice in the winters of 1683-4, of 1739-40, and of 1813-14. Much damage was sustained by the shipping from the breaking up of the ice, Jan. 26, 1829. Navigation was resumed after a suspension of several weeks from the ice, Feb. 8, 1838. A tunnel from Gravesend to Tilbury Fort was proposed in 1798, and an effort made to carry it into execution in 1801. The tunnel at Rotherhithe was opened for traffic March 25, 1843. (See THAMES TUNNEL.) By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 47 (Aug. 17, 1857), the conservancy was vested in the corporation of the city of London. It came into operation Sep. 29, 1857, and was amended by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 113 (July 29, 1864). The conservancy of the Thames and the Isis, from Staines to Cricklade, was vested in the conservators of the Thames by the Thames Naviservators of the Thames by the mannes Navi-gation Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 89), Aug. 6, 1866.

THAMES EMBANKMENT. — After the Great Fire of 1666, Sir C. Wren proposed an embankment from the Temple to the Tower. Gwynne recommended the construction of quays on both sides of the river in his "London and Westminster Improved," published in 1767. The corporation obtained powers for embanking a small portion in 1767, and an act for the erection of Adelphi Terrace was passed in 1770. Plans for the embankment of the Thames at London were proposed by Sir Frederick Trench, in 1828. A committee of the House of Commons was appointed to consider the expediency of erecting an embankment from London Bridge to Vauxhall, March 27, 1840, and with that object a survey was made,

Nov. 8, 1841. Another plan was proposed by John Martin, the painter, in 1856; but no measures were taken for carrying the work into effect. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 104 (Aug. 2, 1858), the Metropolitan Board of Works received power to construct embankments; and in consequence of their representations a parliamentary committee was nominated in 1860, to consider the plans proposed by different architects. The committee held their first architects. The committee near their first meeting April 30, 1861, and presented their report, in which they approved of the design of F. W. Sheilds, July 2, 1861. Provision was made for embanking the north side of the Thames, from Blackfriars to Westminster Bridge, and for forming the approaches thereto, by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 93 (Aug. 7, 1862). By 26 & 27 Viet. c. 75 (July 28, 1863), provision was made for embanking the south side of the Thames. The foundation stone of the embankment on the north side was laid July 8, 1864, and that of the south side, July 28,

THAMES TUNNEL (London) was designed by Sir M. I. Brunel (1760—Dee; 12, 1849). By 4 & 5 Geo. IV. c. 156 (June 24, 1824), a company was empowered to make and maintain a tunnel under the Thames from Wapping, Middlesex, to Rotherhithe, in Surrey. A shaft was sunk, and the first brick laid, March 2, 1825. The river broke in May 18, 1827, 544 feet of the tunnel being constructed. The second irruption took place Jan, 12, 1828, when six workmen perished, and the fifth and last irruption happened March 6, 1838. The tunnel was opened for passenger traffic March 25, 1842 by Sir M. I. Brunel (1769—Dec. 12, 1849). By THANET (Kent), the ancient Tanatis or Tanatos, also called Rium, at which the Saxons under Hengist and Horsa first landed in 449. A band of Danes wintered here in 851. They invaded the island in $53; in the autumn of $65; in $980; and in $985; when they burned a nunnery with the nuns, the clergy, and people who had taken refuge there. Ethelred II. levied an army to give the Dance battle in rooz, and some fled to the Isle of Thanet, where he could not follow them. The Danes again landed on this island in 1009, and after committing great ravages in Kent, retreated here to winter. Sweyn, King of Denmark, laid the Isle of Thanet waste in 1011. Edward III. ordered the island to be fortified in 1369. This island was separated from the mainland by the sea until 1500.

THANE, or THANUS.—This title of honour among the Anglo-Saxons, indicating probably the possession of a certain amount of landed property, gradually fell into disuse after the Conquest, in 1066. In Scotland the title was recognized till near the end of the 15th century. A thane of Cawdor is mentioned in 1492. (See

THAPSACUS, or THAPSACUM (Syria), the "Fatal Ford," probably the Tiphsah mentioned as subject to Solomon, B.C. 1014 (1 Kings iv. 24). The Euphrates was forded here by the army of Cyrus the younger, the water reaching up to the waists of the troops, B.C. 401. It was also crossed by Darius III. when he was advancing against Alexander III., B.C. 333, and by Alexander III. in pursuit of Darius III. the same year.

THAPSUS (Battle).—Julius Cæsar defcated

the army of the Pompeian party near Thapsus, in Africa, Feb. 6, B.C. 46. Demass is supposed to occupy the site of Thapsus.

THASOS (Ægean Sea). - This island was first inhabited by the Phenicians, under Thasos-hence its name. It was colonized B.C. 720 or B.C. 708 by settlers from Paros. The Thasians were compelled by Darius I. to pull down their fortifications and remove their ships of war to Abdera, B.C. 492. Disputes arose between the Thasians and the Athenians. The latter, having defeated the Thasians at sea, B.C. 465, laid siege to their city, which, after a blockade of three years' duration, was taken, the fortifications were razed, and the Thasians the fortineations were razed, and the Inasians compelled to pay a large sum of money, B.C. 463. Thasos, which had submitted to Philip V., received its freedom from Rome B.C. 197. THAVIE'S or TAVIE'S INN (London) is of great antiquity. In the reign of Edward III. (1327—77) it belonged to John Thavie, from whose will it appears to have been an inn for how other than the present of the second control of the second con law-students as early as 1347. It was demised to Lineoln's Inn about 1549.

THEATINES. — This religious order in the Roman Catholic Church, founded by John Peter Caraffa, Bishop of Theate, or Chieti, in Naples, in 1524, was constituted by a brief from Clement, June 25. Caraffa was after-wards pope, under the title of Paul IV. (1555—59). Their first house was at Rone. The Theatines had a house in Paris in 1644.

THEATRES. - The earliest dramatic performances took place on waggons and tempo-rary platforms, and there is no record of a permanent building until the erection of the stone theatre in the temple of Dionysius, at Athens, B.C. 500. The finest Greek theatre was that erected by Polycletus, at Epidaurus, about B.C. 436. A temporary theatre built at Rome by M. Amilius Scaurus, B.C. 78, afforded accommodation for 80,000 spectators, and was also remarkable for the splendour of its decorations; and the first permanent theatre at Rome was built by Pompeius, B.C 55; it afforded accommodation for at least 20,000 persons, and Pliny gives the number at 40,000. The theatre of Marcellus was at 4,5000. The theatre of hartering was completed by Augustus B.C. 11. The players and the leaders of the theatrieal factions were expelled by Tiberius for their share in a riot in 23. The mystery plays of the Middle Ages were mostly performed in temporary structures in the open air. The stage for this purpose was erected at Dunstable in 1119. Stage seenery was introduced by Balthasar Peruzzi, of Siena, who died in 1536. The earliest theatrical licence was granted to Burbage and others in 1574, and the first public theatre in London was the Blackfriars (g. v.), which were built in section of the stage and others in 1574, and the first public theatre in London was the Blackfriars (g. v.). which was built in 1576. Knight, referring to the year 1583, remarks (London, v. 275), "The chief London theatres at that period were these:—The Theatre especially so called in Shoreditch, and the Curtain close by; Paris Cardon, Papularida, chieffy, weed as a Bear Garden, Bankside, chiefly used as a Bear Garden, but also for the performance of plays, as Dekker, in his satire upon Jonson, makes the latter say he had played Zulziman there; the Blackfriars, Whitefriars, Salisbury Court : Rose, Hope, Swan, Newington, Red Bull; and Cockpit or Phonix, in Drury Lane. Various places of minor importance were also dignified by the name of Theatre, as the inn yard of the Bel Savage, remarkable, according to Prynne, for the visible apparition of the devil upon the stage on one occasion, during Elizabeth's reign." These were suppressed during the interregnum. In 1578 Palladio built a theatre on the classic model at Vicenza, and in 1588 Scamozzi attempted to revive the same system at Sabbionetta. The first play-bill was issued from Drury Lane Theatre, April 8, 1663, and amounced the performance of the "Humourous Lieutenant," to commence at three chlock. o'clock. Theatres are regulated by 6 & 7 Vict.

c. 68 (Aug. 22, 1843). (See DRAMA.)
THEBAN LEGION, in the service of Maximian, in Gaul, consisting entirely of Christians, having, according to the story, in 286, refused to march forward to persecute their brethren in the faith, were twice decimated at the spot where the abbey of St. Maurice was afterwards founded in honour of their leader. Still persisting in their refusal, the order was given for the whole band to be massacred, and they laid down their arms and submitted to martyrdom. Robertson (Hist. of the Christian Church, b. i. ch. 7) says the story, "although extravagantly fabulous, may still have some foundation of truth." It was first myliched in the other care.

THEBAN WAR.—(See SEVEN CAPTAINS.)

THEBES (Italy) was founded, according to tradition, by a colony of Phœnicians, under Cadmus, B.C. 1550 or B.C. 1400. They were driven out by the Bœotians, B.C. 1124. Platæa, one of the Bœotian cities, revolted from Thebes B.C. 510, and applied for help to Athens. A war ensued between Thebes and Athens, in which the latter was victorious. This caused much animosity between Thebes and Athens; and in the Persian war, B.C. 480, the Thebans deserted the cause of Greece and fought against the Athenians at Platea, B.C. 479. The Athenians invaded Beetia, and established a democratic government in Thebes, B.C. 456. (See Seven Captains, War.) The aristocratic leaders went into exile, but returned B.C. 447, defeated the Athenians, and re-established the former government. The Thebans were allies of the Spartans in the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 431-B.C. 404. Sparta having claimed supre-437—B.C. 404. Sparta lawing chalmen supre-macy over the whole of Greece, the Thebans joined the Atheniaus, B.C. 395. The peace of Antalcidas put an end to the war, B.C. 387, and deprived Thebes of her supremacy over Beetia. The Spartans, who treacherously seized the citadel of Thebes B.C. 382, were defeated at Leuctra, in July, B.C. 371; and the Thebans regained their power in Greece. In the Sacred war (B.C. 357—B.C. 346) the Thebans, supported by Philip II, of Macedon, were opposed to Athens and Sparta. Thebes was razed to the ground by Alexander III., B.C. 335, after which it never again formed an in-dependent state. Cassander restored the city B.C. 315, and it was taken by Demetrius B.C. 293, and again B.C. 290. The Thebans were defeated in an attempt to expel the Bulgarians from Greece in 1040, and their city was plundered by the Normans of Sicily in 1146. It was one of the most flourishing cities of Greece during the roth and 11th centuries.

THEBES, or LUXOR (Egypt).—The foundation of this city, called No (Ezek. xxx. 14—16, Jer. xlvi. 25), No-Amon (Nahum iii. 3), and Diospolis Magna, by the Greeks, was ascribed by the Egyptians to Menes, the first King of Egypt, B.C. 2717. It united all Egypt under its sway, and reached its greatest splendour, having 100 gates, "as sung by Homer," and 20,000 war-chariots, and was the residence of the kings, whose tombs are still extant, B.C. 1600. It was captured by the Persians B.C. 525. Having revolted, it was taken, after a three years' siege, by Ptolemy (VIII.) Soter II., or Lathyrus, about B.C. 87. Strabo visited it, with the expedition of Elius Gallus, B.C. 24. The city began to decline about B.C. 800. The great tablet of Karnak was shown and expounded by the priests to Cæsar Germanicus in 16. The palace of the Memnonium contained a library, or "hall of books." (See KARNAC.) THEFT was forbidden by the eighth commandment in the decalogue, delivered to Moses by Jehovah on Mount Sinai (Exodus xx. 15). By the civil law the thief was required to make restitution of stolen property several fold, according to the nature of the object, or, failing in ability to do so, was to be sold into slavery (Exodus xxii. r.-4), B.c. 1491. The second of the "Twelve Tables" of Roman laws treated of this crime, B.c. 450. At common law, in former times, petty theft (i. e. not above 12 pence in value) was punished by whipping and imprisonment, and grand theft (i. e. over 12 pence in value) by death. Both were made punishable by transportation by 4 Geo. I. c. 11 (1717). The distinction between the two was abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28

(1827). THEISTS.—(See Deists.)

THELLUSSON ACT (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98), passed in 1800 for the purpose of preventing testators from endeavouring to form large fortunes by accumulating the interest on their property. It was named after Peter Isaac Thellusson, a London merchant, who died July 21, 1797, leaving £600,000 to be accumulated during the lives of his three sons and their sons, and when these were dead to be inherited by the eldest great-grandson. It gave rise to considerable litigation, and was established by a decision of Lord Loughborough in 1799, confirmed by the House of Lords in 1805. The last grandson died in 1856, and a dispute having arisen, decision was given, in the House of Lords, in favour of the grandson of Thellusson's eldest son, in 1859. The property handed over, instead of being 19 millions, as had been anticipated, was little in excess of the original £600,000, on account of legal expenses, losses, and mismanagement.

THEMISTIANS .- (See AGNOTTES.) THEODOLITE, first mentioned in the Pantometria of Thomas Digges, published in 1571, was first used in the survey of Zealand made by Bugge, 1762-8. Ramsden finished his theodolite in 1787, for the use of Gen. Ray, in the great trigonometrical survey of England and

THEODOSIA, or FEODOSIA (Crimea), the modern Caffa (q. v.), named by Leucon, King of Bosporus (B.C. 393—B.C. 353), after his wife Theodosia, was a flourishing colony. It was ruined before the beginning of the 2nd cen-

(See DUMBARTON.)

THEODOSIAN CODE.—Theodosius II., in 429, appointed a committee of eight persons, at the head of whom was Antiochus, to form a code from all the constitutions and laws which had been promulgated from the reign of Constantine I. (323-37). This committee was renewed in 435, and the code, consisting of 16 books, was published at Constantinople, THEODOSIOPOLIS (Asia).—This city of Armenia is supposed to have been situated Armenia is supposed to have been situated. near the spot occupied by Erzcroum (q. v.).

THEOLOGY.—The word was first employed in its present signification by Peter Abelard (1079—April 21, 1142), who wrote a work entitled "Theologia Christiana." The scholastic theology was founded by Roscelin of Compiègne about 1100; and public schools for the study of the science were established in Italy soon after 1360. Lord Bacon's system of natural theology was embodied in the "De Augmentis Scientiarum," published in 1623, and Dr. William Paley's "Natural Theology" was published in 1802.

THEOPHILANTHROPISTS.—This seet of Natural Religionists sprang up during the French revolution, about 1796. They opened four temples in Paris, where a sort of liturgy was chanted, and, instead of an altar, they had an immense basket of flowers as an emblem of the creation. Lépaux, onc of the first five the creation. Lépaux, one of the first five directors in France, put himself at their head in 1797. They became extinct in 1802.

THEOSOPHISTS, or FIRE-PHILOSOPHERS.—This sect of philosophers, which rose in the 16th century, followed the teaching of Theophrastus Paracelsus (1493—Sep. 24, 1541). They attributed very little to human reason and reflection, and ascribed everything to experience and divine illumination. In the beginning of the 17th century considerable animosity prevailed between the Theosophists and the Peripatetics. Great numbers of the and the Peripatetics. Great numbers of the Theosophists joined the Rosierucians.

THERA (Ægean Sea).—This island, which is said to have received the name of Calliste when first inhabited by the Phoenicians, was colonized by the Lacedamonians and the Minyæ, B.C. 1074, under Theras, from whom it was called Thera. Another small island was thrown up by a submarine volcano near it emerged from the sea, and to have been Thera, in 726.

THERAPEUTE.—This seet, a branch of the Essenes (q. v.), arose in Egypt in the 1st century. They were more rigid in their observances and frequented solitudes.

THERESA (Order).—This female order was founded by Theresa, Queen of Bavaria, Dec. 12, 1827, for unmarried noble ladies of all Christian sects.

THERMIDORIANS .- A name given to a large party in the republican convention of France, on account of their triumph in the counter-revolution of the oth Thermidor, July 27, 1795. They chose Tallien as their chief, 27, 1795. They chose failed as men ciner, endeavoured to put a stop to the revolutionary passion for bloodshed, and opposed the constitution of 1795. Their power soon declined. THERMOMETER, or HEAT-MEASURER, was invented about the beginning of the 17th century, though some ascribe it to Galileo, who is said to have constructed one prior to 1507. Santorio of Padua, in his Commentaries on Avicenna (1629), also claims the invention. Sir Isaac Newton used an oil thermometer in 1701. Römer's thermometer was known all over Europe in the beginning of the 18th century. The centigrade thermometer used in France was invented by Celsius, a Swedish astronomer, in 1742. A self-registering thermometer, filled with alcohol, was invented in mometer, filled with alcohol, was invented in 1782. The scale generally used in this country was invented by Fahrenheit in 1724.

THERMOPYLÆ (Greece).—This narrow pass, leading from Thessaly into Locris, is celebrated as the scene of the battle in which Leonidas, King of Sparta, with 300 men, arrested the progress of the whole army of the Persians until they found another path over the mountains, Aug. 7-9, B.C. 480. The allied army of the Greeks assembled at the pass to oppose the Gauls under Brennus, B.C. 279. The invaders having been conducted across the mountains by the same path the Persians had followed, the Greeks retired to their ships. Philip V. of Macedon forced the fortifications, which had been made by the Etolians, B.C. 207. Antiochus III. (the Great) of Syria, when at war with the Romans, fortified the pass, B.C. 191. (See AMPHICTYONIC

THERMUM, THERMUS, or THERMA (Greece), was, on account of its strength, considered impregnable. It was surprised, B.c. 218, by Philip V. of Macedon, who carried off the most valuable portion of the spoil, and destroyed the remainder. A few years later, the Etolians having sided with the Romans, Dhills V. con surprised Thomaus. Philip V. again surprised Thermum, B.C. 205, and destroyed everything that had escaped his former invasion. (See ÆTOLIAN LEAGUE.)

is said to have derived its name from Thespia, a daughter of Asopus, or from Thespius, a son of Erechtheus, who migrated from Athens. It was burned by Xerxes B.C. 479, was rebuilt, and the Thespians fought against the Athenians at the battle of Delium, B.C. 424. In the next year the Thebans destroyed the walls of Thespiæ. An ineffectual attempt was made to overthrow the government B.C. 414. The walls were again destroyed by the Thebans

B.C. 372.
THESSALONIANS (Epistles to).—These two epistles were written at Corinth by St. Paul to the church and brethren at Thessalonica, about 52.

THESSALONICA.—(See SALONICA.)
THESSALY (Greece).—The Thessalians settled in this country, called Æolis, which was named after them, B.C. 1124. The Atheren nians, who invaded the country under the command of Myronides, B.C. 454, were compelled to retreat. The Spartans under Brasidas marched through Thessaly B.C. 424. The Thessalonians joined the Bootians against the Spartans B.C. 395. Jason, the son of Lycophron, was elected Tagus of Thessaly B.C. 374; and after the battle of Leuctra, B.C. 371, the Thebans invited him to join in an attack upon the Spartan camp; but he declined, and was assassinated, B. C. 370. but he decimed, and was assassmented, B. C. 370.

Pelopidas invaded Thessaly B. C. 360, and again in B. C. 368. Philip II. of Macedon, who marched into Thessaly B. C. 353, was defeated and driven out. He returned, and Thessaly fell entirely under his rule, B. C. 344. Thessaly was liberated by the Romans B.C. 197, and was made a Roman province B.C. ros.

THETFORD (Norfolk).—A synod was held at this place, the Sitomagns of the Romans, in 669. The Danes wintered here in 866, and Herfast removed the bishopric of the East Angles from Elmham to Thetford in 1078, where it remained till 1092, when it was transwhere it remained thi rog2, when it was transferred to Norwich. The grammar-school was founded before 1328. Thetford was made the see of a suffragan bishopric by Henry VIII., March 19, 1536. Its first charter, granted by Elizabeth, March 12, 1573, was renewed by Chaple II. March 1602.

Charles II., March 6, 1683.

THIAR.—(See ORIHUELA.)
THIBET, or TIBET (Central Asia).—This extensive region, chiefly comprised within the Chinese empire, was first erected into a king-dom B.C. 313. Buddhism was introduced in 407, and Thibet was compelled to pay tribute to China in 821. It was ravaged by the Mongols, under Zingis Khan, in 1206. The easternmost parts of Thibet were gradually conquered by the Chinese in 1125, 1362, and 1371, and the whole of the kingdom was made subject to them in 1720. The Ghoorkhas of Nepaul, who invaded it 1790, were repulsed with great loss. (See LAMAISM.)
THIEVES' ISLANDS.—(See LADRONE ISLANDS.)

THIMBLE.—Bronze thimbles, similar to those in use, were employed by the ancients, and thimbles open at the end were discovered in the ruins of Herculancum, destroyed in 79. THIRD DERBY ADMINISTRATION was formed soon after the resignation of the Russell (Second) Administration, June 26, 1866. The ministerial arrangements, announced July 9, were as follows:

TreasuryEarl of Derby.
Lord Chancellor....Lord Chelmsford.

The Marquis of Abercorn was made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Earl of Carnarvon, Viscount Cranborne, and Gen. Peel resigned, March 2, 1867, on account of a difference of opinion respecting reform, and the following arrangements were announced March 8 :-

War. Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart.
War. Sir John Pakington, Bart.
Board of Trade Duke of Richmond.

THIRTY (Battle of the).—In 135, during the contest in Britanny between the houses of De Montfort and De Blois, Sir Robert de Beaumanoir, governor of the castle of Josselin, a knight belonging to the latter party, appeared before the castle of Ploermel, and having failed in his attempt to lure the garrison out to attack him, challenged Bembro, the governor, to come out with two or three knights to combat with an equal number. After some parley it was arranged that 30 champions of each party should meet at the Chêne de Mi-Voie (Half-way Oak), between the castles of Jos-(Hair-way Oas), between the casties of Josselin and Ploermel, Sunday, March 27, 1351.
The encounter accordingly took place. Sir Robert de Beaumanoir's, called the French party, consisted of nine French and Breton knights, and 21 Breton squires, whilst Bembro had 20 Englishmen, the rest being Germans or Bretons. After a long struggle, Bembro and eight of his men having been killed, the others surrendered.

THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES.—Ten articles to establish Christian quietness and unity were adopted by the Reformed Church of England in 1536. Owing to their unpopularity they were superseded, in 1537, by a formulary known as the "Institution of a Christian Man." In 1538 a series of 13 articles, proposed to Henry VIII. by the German reformers, was declined, and the following year six articles were enforced by the statute known as the Bloody Bill, 3r Hen. VIII. c. 14 (1539). In 1551, 4e outlines were prepared, and, after several modifications, a mandate was published for their subscription. June 15 152. for their subscription, June 19, 1553. During the reign of Mary, Gardiner introduced a series of 15 articles in 1555, and the houses of Convocation four articles in 1558, both of which systems favoured popery. In 1559, 17 Protestant articles were established, and in 1563 the 42 articles of Edward VI. were revised by Convocation and reduced in number to 39. In 1595 Archbishop Whitefft attempted to introduce a system of Calvinistic tenets known as the Lambeth articles (q. v.), but they were immediately suppressed in consequence of the royal disapprobation. A separate series of 104 articles was adopted in Ireland in 1615, and in 1635 the Irish Church accepted the 39 English articles. In 1643 the articles were revised by the assembly of divines, and in 1660 revised by the assembly of divines, and in 1900 and 1680 they gave rise to much agitation.

THIRTY TYRANTS (Athens).—When Athens surrendered to Lysander, 8.0. 404, the supreme power was vested in 30 persons chosen by the Lacedæmonians. Thrasybulus, who had been sent into exile by them, collected a small company of followers, and, after gaining several victories over the troops, drove the "thirty" from Athens B.C. 403.

THIRTY TYRANTS (Rome) .- During the empire a series of usurpers rose and fell in rapid succession, 248 – 268, to whom this appellation has been applied, although, excluding women and children, the number did not, according to Gibbon, exceed 19.

THIRTY YEARS' WAR was waged between the Protestants and Roman Catholics of Germany. The eruel manner in which the Emperor Mathias treated the Protestants caused a revolt. The first overt act of hos-tility occurred in Bohemia. The two royal ministers, Slawata and Martinitz, with their secretary Fabricius, were thrown out of the scerctary Fabricius, were thrown out of the window of the council-house at Prague, May 23, 1618. On the death of the Emperor Mathias, the insurgents declared the throne vacant, and crowned Frederick V. Electorpalatinate, son-in-law of James I. of England, at Prague, Nov. 4, 1619. The cause of Ferdinand II., Archduke of Austria, who had succeeded his uncle Mathias, and claimed the Undowing room. Was separated by the Prague Bohemian crown, was espoused by the Roman Catholic princes, while those of the Protestant states took the side of Frederick. The Bavarians, commanded by their duke and the Plants, commanded by their duke and the celebrated filly, defeated the Bohemians at Prague, Nov. 9, 1620. The struggle was brought to a close by the peace of Westphalia, signed at Münster Oct. 24, 1648. Tilly lost his life April 30, 1632, and Gustavus II. (Adolphus) Nov. 16, 1632, in battles fought in THISTLE (Order), also called the Order of St. Andrew, was instituted, according to some authorities, in memory of a battle won by the Scotch over the English, by the aid of St. Andrew. Others ascribe it to Achaius, King Andrew. Others ascribe it to Achauns, Aing of Scotland, 787 or 812; others to the æra of Charles VII. (1422—61) of France. It was, however, established by James V. in 1540, revived by James II., of England, May 29, 1687, and re-established by Queen Anne, Dec.

THOMAS'S (ST.) HOSPITAL (London), founded in 1213 by Richard, prior of Bermondsey, was purchased at the dissolution of the selicities of the the religious houses by the eitizens of London, and opened as an hospital in Nov., 1552. A large part of the cdiffee was rebuilt in 1693, and additions were made in 1732. The north wing was completed in 1836, and the south wing in 1842. It was pulled down to afford space for the South-Eastern Railway in 1862, and a new edifiee commenced at Stangate, opposite the Houses of Parliament.

THOMISTS.—(See MOLINISTS, SCOTISTS, &c.)
THOMITES.—A lunatic named John Thom, a native of Cornwall, who resided at Canterbury, assumed the name of Sir William Courtenay, professed to be entitled to some of the finest estates in Kent, and having collected a number of the peasantry, persuaded them that he held a divine commission, May 28, 1838. They marched through several villages, and with an increased force returned to Bossenden farm May 31, where Thom shot a constable who had come to take him into custody. A party of military was thereupon brought from Canterbury. They found the madman and his followers sheltered in a sequestered part of Bossenden Wood. As they advanced, Lieut. Bennett, of the 45th regiment, was shot dead by the soi-disant prophet. The soldiers fired a volley, when Thom and ten of his infatuated followers were killed, and the mob dispersed.

THONON (France).—This ancient town of Savoy, destroyed by the Burgundians in the 5th century, was rebuilt by Rodolph III., and again destroyed by the people of Berne in the 14th century. It was annexed to France in 1792, restored to Sardinia in 1815, and ceded to Bardinia in 1815, and ceded to

France in 1860. (See RIPAILLE.) THORINUM, THORIUM, or THORINA.— This metallie body was discovered by Berze-

THORN (Prussia) was founded in 1231 by the Teutonic knights, who became feudatories of Poland by the peace of Thorn, concluded Oct. 19, 1466. A conference was held here between the Polish Roman Catholics and the Dissidents, Oct.—Nov. 21, 1645. Thorn was taken after a siege of four months by Charles XII. of Sweden, in 1703. The Protestants were massacred here in 1724. Thorn fell into the possession of the Prussians in 1793, and was captured by the French under Marshal Ncy, in Nov., 1806. The Poles, in alliance with the French, defeated the Austrians here May 14, 1809. The French garrisoned it in Jan., 1813, and it was blockaded by the Russians till it surrendered, April 17, 1813. Thorn was eeded to Prussia in 1815. Nicholas Copernicns (Feb. 10, 1473—May 24, 1543) was born here, and a statue to his memory was erected in the market-place in 1853. the Teutonic knights, who became feudatories

THRACE (Turkey), the modern Roumelia, is said to have been peopled by a tribe of Pelasgians. The authentie history of the country commences with the formation of the Greek settlements in the 6th century B.C.

THRASYMENE OF TRASIMENE LAKE (Battle).-Hannibal, during the second Punic war, defeated the Roman army, commanded by the Consul Flaminius, in a narrow pass of the Apennines, with only one outlet towards Perusia, near the Trasimene Lake, B.C. 217. The consul himself and 15,000 Romans fell, and the rivulet which runs into the lake to this day bears the name Sanguinetto. The modern spelling, Thrasymene, is not found in the works of ancient writers.

THREATENING LETTERS .- By 8. Hen. VI. c. 6 (1430), the sending or delivering of threat-ening letters was declared high treason, and by 9 Geo. I. c. 22 (1722), it was made a capital felony. (See BLACK ACT.) By 4 Geo. IV. c. 54 (July 8, 1823), the sentence was commuted to transportation for life, or imprisonment not transportation for the, or impresentation for the exceeding seven years. This act was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, s. 1 (June 21, 1827), and further provisions were enforced by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 66 (July 9, 1847).

THREE DENOMINATIONS.—The Baptists,

the Congregationalists or Independents, and the Presbyterians associated under the name of the Three Denominations in 1727.

THREE HENRIES (War of the).—The eighth religious war in France (1586-89) received this name from its three leaders, Henry III., King of France, Henry of Navarre (after-wards Henry IV. of France), and Henry, Duke of Guise. The three Henries were assassinated; Henry, Duke of Guise, by Loignac and the King's Body-guard, Dec. 23, 1588; Henry III. of France, by Jacques Clement, Aug. 2, 1580; and Henry IV. by Rayaillac, May 14, 1610.

THREE KINGS .- The Feast of the Three Kings was kept in the Middle Ages on Twelfth Night, in honour of the three Magi or Wise Men of the East, who brought offerings to the infant Jesus (Matt. ii. 1-12). The Preaching Friars got up a gorgeous spectacle on the subject at Milan in 1336.

THRESHING MACHINE, invented in 1758 by a farmer of Dumblane, in Perthshire, was improved by Meikle, a millwright of Haddingtonshire, in 1786.
THUMMIM.—(See URIM AND THUMMIM.)

THUNDERING LEGION .- During the expedition of Marcus Antoninus against the Marcomanni, in 174, a Christian legion in his army are said to have prayed for rain, whereupon a plentiful shower descended. At the same time a storm of thunder and lightning threw their enemies into confusion, and enabled Antoninus to obtain a decisive victory. The legion consequently received the name of the thundering legion.

THURGAU, or THURGOVIA (Switzerland). -This canton, once governed by its own counts, came under the sway of the house of Habsburg in 1264, was recovered by the Swiss in 1460, and was admitted into the confederation as a distinct state in 1798. It received a constitution in 1831, which was revised in 1837.

THURINGIA (Germany).—This kingdom of Central Germany, founded by the Thuringi, or Doringi, a Gothic tribe, about 426, was annexed to the kingdom of the Franks, by Thierry I., in 530. In 630 it was erected into a duchy, and in 843 it was incorporated with the German kingdom. It was again made a duchy in 849, and in 1025 it was, with Hesse, formed into a landgraviate. The two countries were again separated in 1247, and in 1439 Thuringia was added to Saxony. By the treaties of 1814 and 1815, it was annexed to Prussia. (See Marburg.)

THURIUM, or THURII (Italy), was founded near the site of the ancient Sybaris by some Sybarite exiles, B.C. 443. The Thurians were defeated by the Lucanians in a great battle near Laus, B.C. 390, when above 10,000 were cut to pieces. Thurium joined the Carthaginians, and again returned to its alliance with Rome, B.C. 213, and received a Roman garrison. Hannibal gave up the city to plunder B.C. 204, having first removed 3,500 of its principal citizens to Crotona. A Roman colony was established here B.C. 194. It was taken by Spartacus, and subjected to a heavy fine,

.C. 72. THURLES (Ireland).—In the 10th century a battle was fought at this place in Tipperary, between the Irish and the Danes, in which the former were victorious. The castle, which is of ancient date, was besieged and taken in 1208, by Hugh de Lacey. A monastery of Carmelites was founded in 1300. St. Patrick's college was erected in 1836. A synod of the Roman Catholic clergy, held here Aug. 22, 1850, under the presidency of Dr. Cullen, declared against the Queen's colleges, and recommended the foundation of a Roman Catholic university. The statutes of the synod were published Jan. 1, 1852.

THUROT'S EXPEDITION.—Francis Thurot, an Irish adventurer, in the French service, sailed from Dunkirk, Oct. 5, 1759, intending to make a diversion either in Scotland or Ireland. He landed at Carrickfergus, Feb. 21, 1760, took the town after a short blockade, and plundered it. Having sailed from Carrickfergus, he was pursued by Capt. Elliot, with three ships, who came up with him in the Irish Channel. An engagement ensued, Feb. 28; Thurot fell covered with wounds, and his ships were taken.

THURSDAY .- Among all the ancient nations of northern Europe, the fifth day of the week was consecrated to Thor, the king of heaven, and the thunderer. It is a remark-able coincidence that in the Roman week the same day was known as Dies Jovis, or the day of Jupiter, who occupied, in classical mythology, the same position as was assigned to Thor by the Teutons. (See MAUNDY THURS-

THYATIRA (Battle).—Valens, Emperor of the East, gained a victory over his rival Pro-copius, at this town of Lydia, in 366. (See SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA.)

THYMBRA (Battle) was gained by the Persians, under Cyrus the Elder, over Crossus, King of Lydia, B.C. 548. This victory made Cyrus undisputed master of Asia. TIARA.—The first crown, or regnum, on the episcopal mitre of the popes, is said to have been the gift either of Constantine I. (223— 37), or of Clovis I. (481—511). (See Crown.) TIBER (Italy).—An inundation of this river is said to have swept away all the houses and buildings at Rome, in the lower part of the city, B.C. 241. Others took place B.C. 54 and B.C. 27. Augustus (B.C. 31—A.D. 14) first instituted magistrates whose duty it was to restrain the river within due bounds, and preserve the embankments, &c. This office was regarded as one of the most honourable in the state. An inundation caused such serious damage in 15, that it was proposed in the senate to diminish the waters by diverting some of the chief tributaries of the stream. In ancient times the Tiber was occasionally frozen, but this did not occur often. Livy notices its having been frozen over in the extraordinary winter of B.C. 398. It was called the "Yellow Tiber"—on account of its turbid waters—Rumon, Thybris, Tiberis, and Albula. (See Alba Longa.

TIBERIAS (Battle).—Saladin defeated the Crusaders under Guy of Lusignau, King of Jerusalem, at this city of Palestine, July 3 and 4, 1187. Guy, Marquis of Montferrat, and many of the chief Christian leaders were made prisoners, and the reputed true cross, used as a standard during the battle, fell into the hands of the enemy. Saladin disgraced his victory by the massacre in cold blood of 230 knights of St. John, who were among the prisoners. TIBERIAS (Palestine). — This town of Galilce, on the shore of Lake Tiberias, was built by Herod Antipas, before A.D. 39, and named in honour of the Emperor Tiberius. It was taken and destroyed by Vespasian, in Aug., 67; but sprang up again after the destruc-67; but sprang up again after the destruc-tion of Jerusalem, Sep. 8, 70, and was the garrison destroyed their cannon and with-seat of a succession of Hebrew judges and doctors till the 4th century. Epiphanius, Bishop of Salamis, in 367, states that a Hebrew translation of St. John and of the Acts of the Apostles was kept here. The modern town, called Tabarieh, was almost destroyed by an earthquake Jan. 1, 1837. TIBESTE (Battle).—The Moors defeated the Romans at this place, the modern Tibesh, in Algiers, in 543, when the eunuch Solomon, the governor of Africa, was killed.

TIBET .- (See THIBET.)

TIBUR (Italy).-This town of Latium, the site of which is occupied by Tivoli, was founded on the banks of the Arno, many years before Rome. It is first noticed in history as the place to which M. Claudius retired on being exiled, B.C. 446. The territory was devastated by the Romans B.C. 350, and the town was taken B.C. 335. The remains of some ancient edifices were discovered in 1778, 1826, and 1832.

TICINO (Battles).—The banks of this river in Italy, the ancient Ticinus, on which Pavia is situated, have been the scene of several battles, in both ancient and modern times. Here Hannibal defeated P. Scipio B.C. 218, Aurelian the Alemanni in 270, and Constantius II. Magnentius in 352. The Austrians crossed the TICINO, TESSINO, or TESSIN (Switzerland).-Before the time of the Romans, this canton was inhabited by the Lepontii, and other aboriginal tribes of mountaineers, who were subdued by the Emperor Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14). It was conquered by the Longo-bards in the 6th century, and was subse-quently occupied by the dukes of Milan, the barons of Saxe and other Rhætian lords, till the 15th century, when it came into the possession of Switzerland, confirmed by treaty April 10, 1503. It was not admitted into the Swiss Confederation till 1815. Its government underwent a considerable modification in June, 1830.

TICINUM.—(See Pavia.)
TICKETS OF LEAVE.—In consequence of the difficulty experienced in transporting felons, the Sovereign was empowered by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 20, 1853), by means of an order in writing from the sccretary of state, to grant licences-called tickets of lcave-to convicts under sentence of transportation, or penal servitude, to be at large in the United Kingdom. These licences could be revoked if necessary, and the convict apprehended and committed to prison for the residue of his original sentence. The act was amended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3 (June 26, 1857), and by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47 (July 25, 1864).

TICONDEROGA N. America).—The fortress of Ticonderoga, in New York, was built by the French in 1755. The English, under Aber-crombie, assailed it unsuccessfully July 8, 1758. It was taken by them, under Amherst, July 26, 1759. The revolted Americans surprised it May 10, 1775, and they evacuated it on the approach of the English, under Burgoync, July 6, 1777. Gen. Lincoln made a vain attempt to drew into Canada. The English occupied it again in 1780.

TIDES.—The earliest author who notices the tides is Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927), and the first who says anything of their cause is Pytheas of Marseilles, who lived about the time of Alexander III., B.C. 336—B.C. 323. (See Moon.) The theory of the tides was first explained by Kepler (1571—Nov. 15, 1630), and a more complete explanation was given by Sir Isaac Newton in his "Principia," published in 1687. Newton in his "Principia," published in 1687. It was still further improved by Bernouilli, Mac-laurin, and Eulen in the control of the contr havin, and Euler, in their treatises written when the subject was proposed as a prize by the French Academy of Sciences in 1738.

TIEN-TSIN (China). — A treaty between England and China was concluded at this town, by Lord Elgin, June 26, 1858, and at the same time separate treaties were made by the plenipotentiaries of France, Russia, and the United States. Tien-tsin was occupied by the French and English, Aug. 23, 1860. The English consulate was established Jan. 1, 1861. A treaty between China and Prussia, and the Zollverein, was concluded here Sep. 2, 1861. The allied French and English expedition retired from Tien-tsin Oct. 15, 1861. A treaty between Portugal and China was concluded here Aug. 13, 1862, and another between China and Spain, Oct. 10, 1864. TIERRA, &c.—(See TERRA.)

TIERS ÉTAT, or THIRD ESTATE, the name given to the Commons in France. induced Necker to have the number of their representatives doubled (made equal to the other orders, the Clergy and the Nobles, combined) by royal decree, Dec. 27, 1783, in the Etats Genéraux, summoned to meet May 1, 1789. This concession gave them the power to obstruct all legislation, and after many delays, they carried a motion that the Etats Généraux should be called the National Assembly (q. v.),

June 10, 1789. TIFERNUM (Battle).—The Romans defeated the Samnites at this town of Umbria, B.C. There were two towns of the name in Umbria, the one called Tifernum Tiberinum, and the other Tifernum Metaurense. Pliny the Elder (23-Aug. 24, 79) had a villa at the

TIGRANOCERTA (Asia), or the Fortress of Tigranes, the capital of Armenia, built by Tigranes I. during the Mithridatic war, was besieged by the Roman consul Lucullus, and Tigranes I. marched to its relief with an army consisting of 150,000 infantry, 17,000 heavy and 33,000 light cavalry, 20,000 archers and slingers, besides a multitude of pioneers, &c. Lucullus, with 11,000 men, defeated this host with great slaughter, and the city surrendered

B.C. 70. TIGRIS (Asiatic Turkey). — Many famous cities, such as Nineveh, Seleucia, Ctesiphon, Bagdad, and Mosul, stood upon the banks of hagdad, and most, stood upon the banks of this river, the name of which signifies the divisible flux of nows or instants, B.C. 400. "arrowy" stream, which joins the Euphrates at Kurna. The dams constructed across the stream to irrigate the country, were removed by order of Alexander III. (B.C. 336–B.C. myself to think of it, the less I understand 323), to improve the navigation. The English it." The ancient Egyptians and other eastern steamer Euphrates ascended the Tigris to within 20 miles of Mosulin 1838.

TILBURY (Essex).—The fort was built as a block-house by Henry VIII. (1509—47), and Elizabeth lodged here, formed a camp, and reviewed the troops, on the apprehended Spanish invasion, in 1588. It was regularly fortified in 1677.

TILES.—Marble tiles were introduced by Byzes of Naxos, B.C. 620. Wooden tiles were used in Rome till B.C. 284. Tiles were first used in England in 1246, and pantiles were in general use in Europe in the 15th century. Decorative paving-tiles of baked pottery were made in the Middle Ages. The art was revived by Minton, and employed in the restoration of the Temple Church, London, in 1842. Tiles were taxed in 1784. This tax was abolished by 3 Will. IV. c. 11 (May 17, 1833). The tilers and bricklayers were incorporated in 1508.

TILSIT (Prussia) .- This town, on the river Niemen, contains a castle, bufit in 1537. It was occupied by the French, June 20, 1807, and is celebrated as the place of meeting between Napoleon I, and Alexander I, of Russia on the "Raft of Tilsit," June 25, 1807. A second meeting took place in the town June 26, at which the King of Prussia was present. The peace of Tilsit was signed here between France and Russia, July 7, and between France and Prussia, July 9, 1807. The latter treaty was ratified July 19. Secret treaties were also concluded between Napoleon I. and Alexander II., one of which provided for the partition of Europe between them.

TILTS.—(See TOURNAMENTS.)
TIMBER.—A tax was laid on European timber, in order to encourage the trade of British America, in 1809. When the timber duties were consolidated by 59 Geo. III. c. 52 (July 2, 1819), European timber was taxed at £3 58. per load. This duty was reduced to £2 158. by 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 37 (May 28, 1821), which imposed an additional ros. on Canadian timber. Further attempts at equalization were made by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842), and by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 62 (Aug. 7, 1851). Bethell's method of preserving timber by means of creosote was patented in 1848. (See RAFTS.)

TIMBUCTOO (Africa).-This town, near the border of the desert of Sahara, said to have been founded by Mausa Suleiman in 1213, became a powerful state, and was seized by the rulers of Morocco in 1396. It regained its independence about 1500, was again subdued by Morocco in 1672, and remained under its sway till 1727. Since that time it has been sway thi 1727. Since that time it has been alternately independent and subject to the neighbouring states. Laing reached Timbuctoo Aug. 18, 1826, and Dr. Barth Sep. 7, 1853, and remained till July 12, 1854.

TIME.—Pythagoras (B.C. 580—B.C. 507) maintained that time was a substance. Archytas, his follower, defined it as a continued and in-

nations measured time by means of an instrument ealled Clepsydra (q. v.), or water-clock, the principle of which was a constant dropping of water through a small aperture out of one vessel into another. The ancients also measured time by means of the hour-glass and sun-dial. The Druids, at the period of the Roman invasion, B.C. 55, computed their time by nights, and not by days, and measured it by the motions of the moon. (See Clock, LATITUDE and LONGITUDE, &c.)

TIMOTHY (Epistles to). - The first epistle of the apostle Paul to Timothy appears to have been written shortly after Paul left Ephesus to go into Macedonia, about 64. The second was written by Paul when a prisoner at Rome, according to Lardner, in May, 61, and according to other authorities in 65.

TIN.—This metal, one of the most ancient known, is mentioned by Moses B.C. 1451 (Num. xxxi. 22), and was imported into Tyre from Britain as early as B.C. 588. (See CASSITERIDES.) Spain was also a tin-producing country visited by the ancients. The Cornish tin-mines were worked by the ancient Britons during the Roman occupation, but were neglected by the Saxons. The Norman sovereigns derived immense profit from exporting the metal, as during their reigns England was the only country in which it was found; but the discovery of tin-mines in Bohemia in 1241 tended to diminish the English trade. Edward III. elaimed a monopoly of the tin-mines of Devon and Cornwall, May 10, 1338. Mines were discovered at Altenberg, in Saxony, in 1458, and in Barbary in 1640, in consequence of which the importation of the metal into this country was prohibited by a proclamation of Charles I. The tin-mines of Banca were discovered in 1710, and their produce was first imported into England in 1787. In 1665 an attempt was made to introduce the manufacture of tin-plate into England from Germany, where it had been long established, and in 1681 some success was attained by Andrew Yarranton. The manufacture was established about 1730, when Pontypool in Monmouthshire was made its chief seat. The composition known as Britannia metal, of which tin forms the principal ingredient, was first made at Sheffield about 1770. By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 120 (Aug. 16, 1838), the duties were fixed at 10s. per hundredweight for tin ore, and 15s. for the manufactured metal. The tin plate makers were incorporated in 1670. (See FARTHING, MONEY,

TINCHEBRAY, or TINCHENBRAY (Battle). -Henry I. of England defeated his brother Robert Curthose, and took him prisoner before the castle of Tinchebray, in Normandy, Sep.

28, 1106. TINEH.—(See PELUSIUM.)

TINKERS.—(See CARBONARI.)
TINTERN ABBEY (Monmouthshire) was founded for Cistercian monks by Walter de Clare in 1131. The church was commenced by Roger de Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, and mass was first celebrated within it in 1268. The site, granted to the Earl of Worcester by Henry VIII. in 1536, is the property of the Duke of Beaufort.

TIPPERARY (Ireland) was formed into a county by King John in 1210. Insurrectionary movements occurred in 1815, and food riots in 1846. The militia mutinied July 7, 1856. TIPPERMUIR (Battle).—The Marquis of Montrose defeated the Covenanters under Lord Eleho at this village near Perth, Sep. 1, 1644.

TIRLEMONT (Belgium).—This town, taken by the French in 1635, was recovered by Marlborough July 18, 1705. The French defeated the Austrians here in Nov., 1792, and again March 16, 1793. The Belgian army under Leopold I, was defeated here by the Dutch Aug. 11, 1831. Leopold I escaped to Malines. The Gothic church, founded towards the end of the 13th, was rebuilt in the 15th century.

TITANIUM, a metal first discovered by Gregor in the grains of a black mineral found in the bcd of a rivulet in Cornwall in 1791. Klaproth found it in some other minerals in 1795, and gave it the name it now bears. Its properties were first determined by Wollaston

TITCHFIELD, or TICHFIELD (Hampshire). -The marriage of Henry VI. with Margaret of Anjou is said to have taken place here April 22, 1445. Near the town are the ruins of Titchfield House, erected on the site and with the materials of the Præmonstratensian abbey, materials of the Freemonstratensian above, founded in 1231. In this mansion Charles I, took refuge after making his escape from Hampton Court in 1647. The free school for boys and girls is supported by a fund bequeathed by Henry, Earl of Southampton, in TITHES, or TENTHS. - Abraham gave Melchizedek tithes of all the spoil he had taken from the five kings, B.C. 1913 (Gen. xiv. 20), and the Levitical law ordered the Jews to set apart a tenth of all their goods to the service of the Lord, B.C. 1491 (Lev. xxvii. 30—32). The right of the elerpy "to live by the Gospel" (I Cor. ix. 4—14) was maintained in the Apostolic age (Matt. x. 10, Luke x. 7, Romans xv. 27, &c.). Among the early Christians, the payment of tithes was regarded as a matter of conscience, and no laws were passed for its enforcement until the Council of Macon, Oct. 23, 585. The custom of devoting a tenth part of all property to the service of the clergy is mentioned in the canons of Egbert, Archbishop of York, in 750, and in the ordinances of the Council of Celchyth in 787. In 794, Offa, King of Mercia, endowed the church with tithes of all his kingdom, and Charlemagne made several laws regulating their payment about 800. The tithe system was sanctioned and amended by the general Lateran council of 1215. By 37 Hen. VIII. c. 12 (1545), the inhabitants of London were ordered to pay 28. 9d. in the pound on rent as tithes. Numerous amendments in the tithe laws were made by 2 & 3 ments in the title laws were made by z = Edw. VI. c. 12 (15,48), and subsequent statutes. Tithes were abolished in France Aug. 4, 1789. By the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Will. VI. c. 71 (Aug. 13, 1839), commissioners were appointed to effect a commutation of tithes for a rent-charge based upon the average prices of wheat, barley, and oats for seven years. This act was amended by 7 Will. IV. & 1 Viet. c. 69 (July 15, 1837), by 1 & 2 Viet. c. 64 (Aug.

4, 1838), by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62 (Aug. 17, 1839), by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15 (June 4, 1840), by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54 (July 30, 1842), by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 73 (Aug. 26, 1846), and by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 104

(July 22, 1847). TITLES.—(See Nobility, Peers, &c.)

TITUS (Epistle) .- The dato of Paul's epistle to Titus has been a subject of much controversy, some placing it as early as 52, and others as late as 65. From the striking verbal resemblances between it and the first epistle to Timothy, it is considered probable that they were written about the same time, i.e. in 64. (See Nicopolis.)

TIVERTON (Devonshire), anciently called Twy-ford-ton and Two-ford-town, from its situation between the rivers Exe and Lowman, was known as the village of Twyford as early as 872, and had a market and three annual fairs in 1200. The wool trade was introduced in 1353. Its prosperity was greatly checked by the plague in 1571, and the town was almost destroyed by fire in 1598. The castle, erected in 1106, was stormed by Fairfax in 1645, and afterwards dismantled. Almshouses were founded by John Greenway in 1529, by John Walsden in 1579, and by George Slee in 1613. The free grammar-school was founded in 1604, and the free English school in 1611. A charitable fund for granting immunities to 67 poor persons was established in 1697, and the charity school was founded in 1713. Tiverton was considered the chief manufacturing town in the west of England in 1612, about which time a second conflagration destroyed nearly all the property of the inhabi-tants. A third fire destroyed 300 houses in 1731, and a twelfth part of the population was cut off by an epidemic fever in 1741. The woollen trade was dostroyed by the introduction of Norwich stuffs in 1745, and this was superseded by the patent net manufacture in 1815. The lace trade was introduced in 1816. The town-hall and corn-market were built in

TIVOLI.—(See TIBUR.)
TLEMSEN, or TLEMCEN (Africa), the capiand many Roman remains are to be found in its vicinity. The greater part of the town was destroyed by the Dey of Algiers as a punishment for the disaffection of its inhabitants, about 1670. The French took it Dec. 5, 1835, and evacuated it, by treaty with Abd-el-Kader, in 1837. It was again taken by the French in 1842, and forms part of their colony of Algeria.

TOBACCO. — The use of this plant by the American Indians was first discovered by the Spaniards, at Cuba, in Nov., 1492, when two of the companions of Columbus observed the natives puffing smoke from their mouths and noses. In 1494 the Indian habit of snufftaking was remarked by the Spaniards, and in 1503 the natives of Paraguay astonished them by chewing the weed and spitting the juice towards them as a mode of repelling their invasion. Oviedo published an account of the use of the weed by the inhabitants of Hispaniola in 1526, and Francesco Hernandez brought some plants to Europe in 1560, and presented them to Philip II. of Spain. Jean

Nicot presented some specimens to Catherine de Medicis of France in 1561, and from him the plant received its scientific name of Nicotiana. It was first brought to England by Sir John Hawkins in 1565, and in 1586 Mr. Ralph Lane introduced the practice of smoking, which was adopted and rendered fashionable by Sir Walter Raleigh. In 1598 Paul Hentzner visited England, and, speaking of the Bear Gardens, says, "At these spectacles, and everywhere else, the English are constantly smoking tobacco," and Dekker, in his "Satiro-mastix," printed in 1602, mentions smoking as a habit of his lady contemporaries. In 1603 James I. published his "Counterblast to Tobacco," and in 1604 he nis "Counterplast to Tobacco," and in 1604 he issued a proclamation against its use, and charged a duty of 6s. 10d. per lb. on all that was sold. James I. published a second document, prohibiting its importation except from British colonics, and forbidding its culture in England or Ireland, and Urban VIII. threat-ened to excommunicate all persons smoking in church, in 1624. Tobacco was introduced into Java by the Dutch in 1601, into Turkey in 1609, was conveyed from Brazil to India in 1617, and it is now generally used in the east-ern hemisphere. In 1634 Charles I. repeated the prohibitions of his father, and extended them to the importation of tobacco seed; and in 162 the Long Parliament passed an act embodying these regulations, which were confirmed by 12 Charles II. c. 34 (1660). The manufacture and sale of tobacco commenced at Venice in 1657. Tobacco was long a medium for payments in Virginia and other parts of America. The tobacconine makers parts of America. The tobacco-pipe makers were incorporated in 1663, and the British Anti-Tobacco Society was formed in 1853. Cigars are first mentioned as a form of tobacco used by the Indians in 1699, and in 1796 they became fashionable at Hamburg, and were thence diffused throughout Europe. The were thence diffused throughout Europe. The growth of tobacco in Ireland, permitted by 19 Geo. III. c. 35 (1779), was again prohibited by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 13 (Aug. 23, 1831). The first duties imposed on tobacco by act of Parliament were levied by 1 James II. c. 4 (1685), and, after many changes, the duties on foreign and British colonial tobacco were equalized at 3s. per Ib. by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842). These duties were reduced by 26 Vict. c. 7 (March. 27, 1862)

(March 27, 1863).
TOBAGO (Atlantic Ocean), called the "Melancholy Isle," one of the West Indian islands belonging to Great Britain, discovered by Columbus in 1496, was first colonized by the Dutch in 1692. They were expelled by the Spaniards, and having returned to the island, abandoned it in 1683. By the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 18, 1748, Tobago was declared neutral, and by the peace of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763, it was assigned to Great Britain. It was taken by the French in 1892, and was calculated. taken by the French in 1781, and was ceded to them by the treaty of Versailles, 1783. The English captured it in 1793, and again July 17, 1803, and it was ceded to them by the congress of Vienna in 1814.

TOBAK (Battle) .- (See BENDER.)

TOBOLSK (Asiatic Russia), the capital of a government of the same name in Siberia, founded by the Russians in 1587, was made a town in 1643. Many of the Swedish officers taken at the battle of Poltava, July 8, 1709, were imprisoned here. Louis XV. of France sent the Abbé Chappe d'Auteroche to observe

TOKAY (Battle). - John Zapolya, whose brother George had been killed in the battle of Mohacs (q. v.), laid claim to the crown of Hungary in 1526, and was supported by Soliman I., Francis I., and Clement VII. Ilaving been saluted king (under the title of John) at Tokay, in Sep., and crowned at Stuhlweissen-burg, Nov. 11, he was defeated by Ferdinand II., at a battle fought at Tokay in Aug., 1527. The Turks, however, still espoused his cause, and he was again crowned at Buda in Sep., 1529. Ferdinand II. concluded a truce with hini, Jan. 31, 1531, and again in 1538. Zapolya died July 21, 1540.

TOKAY (Hungary).—This town of Upper Hungary, on the river Theiss, celebrated for its wines, is situated at the foot of the Hegyalla hills. They are planted with vines which bela IV. (1235—1270) had brought into Hungary by Italian colonists. Tokay was taken from the Turks in 1685. The town was formerly defended by a castle, which was demolished in 1705. The Magyars were driven from their position here, on the Theiss, by the Cossacks, TOKENS.—The use of private tokens, to supply the want of small coin, prevailed in England at the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. (1509-47). The issue of tokens for money by inferior traders led to many complaints in • 1574. The different taverns issued tokens. They were made of lead, tin, latten, and leather, and caused great loss to the poor, as they were only taken at the shops where first issued. (See Copper Coinage.) Private traders struck farthing tokens in lead for some years prior to 1613, in which year (May 19) they were abolished; and all traders' tokens were pro-Silver hibited by royal proclamation in 1674. Silver tokens of the value of 5s. were issued by the Bank of England Jan. 1, 1798, and from the scarcity of small coin, the bank again issued a large quantity of silver tokens at 5s. 6d., 3s., and 1s. 6d., in 1811. The issue of gold and silver tokens, except by the banks of England and Ireland, was prohibited by 52 Gco. III.

TOLEDO (Spain), on the site of the Toletum of the Romans, is said to have been founded by some Jews who migrated to Spain during the period of the second temple in Jerusalem (finished B.C. 515). The Romans took it B.C. 193. Leovigild, King of the Visigoths, made it the seat of his empire in 577. It was enlarged and surrounded by walls by King Wamba in the 7th century, and was taken by the Arabs in April, 712. (See Maghazul, Battle.) Alphonso VI. of Leon, and I. of Castile, captured it, after a siege of three years, May 25, 1085, and built an outer wall to the town in 1109. During the civil wars between Peter I. (the Cruel) and his bastard brothers (1354—1369), the town was frequently taken and retaken, and the inhabitants-chiefly Jewswere ill-treated. Councils were held here, were ill-treated. TORDESILLAS (Treaty). -By a bull dated May 4, 1493, Pope Alexander VI. fixed a line of demarcation from north to south, passing 100 leagues to the west of the Azores and Cape Verde, dividing the New World between Portugal and Spain. All to the east of this line was assigned to Portugal, and all to the west to Spain. This settlement did not satisfy Portugal, and after much negotiation a treaty was concluded at this town in Spain, June 7, 1494, by which the line of demarcation was removed 370 leagues to the west of Cape Verde islands. TORGAU (Prussia).—The league entered into at Gotha in Feb., 1526, between the Landgrave of Hesse and the Elector of Hesse, to support the reformed religion, was ratified at this town in Prussia, March 4, and received the name of the League of Torgau. Here Luther presented the Elector of Saxony with the leading articles of the faith, called the "Articles of Torgau," in 1530. The "Book of Torgau," designed to put an end to the Crypto-Calvinistic controversy, was issued in 1576. An ejectment of divines took place for refusing subscription to the Visitation articles of Torgau in 1592. The Austrians, who captured Torgau in 1760, were defeated in the neighbourhood by the Prussians, commanded by Frederick II., Nov. 3, and the Prussians entered it Nov. 4.

TORONTO (Canada), formerly called York, was surveyed by Governor Simcoe in 1793. The first houses were built in 1794, and it was raised to the rank of a city by Sir John Colborne, and received its present name in 1834. Papineau's "Sons of Liberty" were defeated in an attempt to take the town, Dec. 4, 1837, and the insurrection was suppressed by the militia under Sir Francis Head, Jan. 5, 1838. West Canada was separated from the bishopric of Quebec, and made a district see, in 1839; and Ontario was separated from Toronto in 1861. The seat of government, transferred from Kingston to Toronto in 1844, was re-moved to Quebecin 1856. The cathedral church of St. George was burned down in 1849.

TORPEDO, for producing explosions under the water, was invented by Fulton in 1812. A similar weapon was used by the Russians in 1854, and by the Americans in the war against the South, 1861-65.

TORRE DEL GRECO (Italy).-This town at the foot of Mount Vesuvius existed in 1324. It suffered during the eruption of 1631, and life annuities, with benefit of survivorship. was almost destroyed in 1795. Having been restored, it again suffered from the same cause in 1804 and 1822, and was again destroyed

TORRES STRAIT (Pacific Ocean), separating Australia from Papua, or New Guinea, was discovered by Torres in June, 1606.

TORRES VEDRAS (Portugal).—Sir Arthur
Wellesley commenced his famous "lines" near this town in Portugal in Dec., 1809, and the whole army was collected within them Oct. 15, 1810. There were three lines, the outermost 29 miles long, extending from the sea near Torres Vedras to Alhandra on the Tagus, defended by forts and redoubts, mounting 400

TORTOLA (West Indies).—The group (Virgin Islands) to which the island belongs was discovered by Columbus in 1494. A band of Dutch bucaneers who settled here in 1648 were expelled in 1666 by the English, who have since kept possession.

TORTONA (Italy), the ancient Dertona, a Roman colony, mentioned by Strabo as one of the chief towns in that part in 14, was taken by Frederick I. of Germany in 1155, and its fortifications were repaired in 1156. The papal legate captured it in 1123, the French and Piedmontese in 1735, and it was ceded to Sardinia by the treaty of Luxemburg, June 6, 1736. It was taken by the Spaniards July 24, 1745. The citadel, built by Victor Amadeus III., was handed over to the French general Meynier in June, 1796. The town, after a learning of the state of lengthened siege, surrendered to the Russians Aug. 25, 1799. West of the town is the plain Aug. 25, 1799. West of the town is the plain of Marengo, where the Austrians were defeated by Napoleon Buonaparte, June 14, 1800.

TORTOSA (Spain), the ancient Dertosa, is shown to have been a Roman colony by its coins, some of which bear the head of Julius Cæsar, B.C. 45. Ten large barks filled with Mohammedan troops arrived here in 768. The Wali of the town, having rebelled, issued forth to meet the royal troops that were sent against him, and defeated them with great slaughter in 788. It was besieged by the Christians, who were attacked by the Mohammedans under Prince Abderahman, and routed in 809. The harbour was repaired in 944. Tortosa was captured by the Genoese in 1148; by the French under the Duke of Orleans, July 11, 1708; and again under Marshal Suchet, Jan. 2, 1811. It was held by the French till April 23, 1814. The Carlist princes, the Count de Montemolin and his brother, signed an act here renouncing their claim to the Spanish throne, April 23, 1860. It was revoked by another act, signed at Cologne June 15.

Admiral Parker blockaded the French feet in the harbour in 1694. The siege, commenced by the Duke of Savoy and Prince Eugène, was abandoned Aug. 25, 1707. A Spanish squadron left the harbour to attack the English Mediterrancan fleet, under Admirals Matthews and Lestock, when an engagement took place, without any decisive results, Feb. 11, 1744. An unsuccessful attempt was made upon it by Admiral Boscawen in 1759. During the Revolution its inhabitants handed it over with the port to the English admiral Hood, to be held for the French monarchy, Aug. 27, 1793. It was taken by the republican army Dec. 19, when the artillery was directed by Napoleon Buonaparte. The Carbonari raised an insurrection here in 1821.
TOULOUSE (France), the ancient Tolosa,

an old town of the Volce Tectosages, existed many centuries before it was conquered by the Romans, and appears to have had some kind of alliance with them when it was plundered of a large amount of treasure by Q. Servilius Capio, B.C. 106. It was made the capital of the empire by the Visigoths in 419, and was captured by the Franks, under Clovis I., in 508. Zama, the Saracen, was defeated here by the Duke of Aquitaine in 721, and Charlemagne made it the capital of the new kingdom of Aquitaine in 781. The was ruled by its own counts from 778 till it was joined to France in 1271. It was the seat of a French parliament established in 1302. Henry II. of England, claiming the county, laid siege to the town, but without success, in 1159. The inhabitants revolted, refused to admit Simon de Montfort, and recalled Count Raymond VI., in 1217. De Montfort, killed under the walls June 25, 1218, was succeeded by his son Amaury, who ceded his claims on the city to Louis VIII. in 1224. Another crusade against the Albigenses of the town, to continue for five years, was decreed by the Council of Bourges, and accepted by Louis VIII., in 1225. A council held here pro-hibited laymen from reading the Scriptures, and firmly established the inquisition, in Nov., 1229. The university was established in 1229. The bridge across the Garonne was opened in 1600. In the court of the Capitol the Duke of Montmorency was beheaded, Oct. 30, 1632. The academy of the Floral Games was instituted in 1323. Councils were held here Sep. 13, 1056; about 1060; in 1068; 1079; 1090; about Feb., 1118; July 8, 1119; in 1161; and Nov., 1229. A French garrison occupied it in 1229. Count Alphonso having died childless, the county, at that time the richest in France, fell to his nephew, Philip III., in 1271. A court of minstrels was held here by the Duke of Lancaster in 1381. Jean Calas, a Protestant merchant, charged with murdering his son, who had committed suicide, was broken alive upon the wheel, and his body burned to ashes, March 9, 1762. The Duke of Wellington de-feated the French, under Marshal Soult, April 10, 1814, and compelled them to evacuate the town April 12. Neither general was then aware that Napoleon I. had abdicated. armistice was signed April 18. The powdermills exploded April 16, 1816.

TOURAINE (France). — This province, of which Tours was the capital, was inhabited by the Turones, and was captured by the Visigoths in 480. It underwent various changes, and passed into the possession of England in 1152; and was definitively annexed to France in 1545. (See ABBEVILLE.) TOURKMANTCHAI, TURKMANJAI, or TURKMANSHAI (Treaty) .- A treaty of peace between Persia and Russia was concluded at this place in Persia, Feb. 22, 1828.

TOURNAMENTS, TILTS, or JOUSTS, &c.-The origin of these warlike games has been referred to the time of the Trojan war, and may be traced as far back as the Roman period. They revived under the feudal system; and the earliest on record is one held in 842, at the interview between Louis of Germany, and Charles I. (the Bald) of France, at Strasburg. The Emperor Henry I., who died in 936, was very fond of this species of amusement, and made several laws for its regulation. Geoffrey II. of Britanny was killed at a tournament at Paris Aug. 19, 1186. Tournaments were introduced into England during the reign of Stephen (1135-54). They were prohibited by

Henry II. (1154-89), and were not established in this country until the reign of Richard I. (1189-99). Edward III. held a tournament at Dartford in 1330, and another at Windsor, Jan. 19, 1344, soon after the institution of the Order of the Garter. Henry VIII. and the Duke of Suffolk maintained the field against all comers in May, 1513, and Henry II. of France lost his eye in a tilt with Count Montgomery, and died shortly afterwards of the wound, in 1559. TOURNAY (Belgium) .- This city, the ancient capital of the Nervii, and known under the name of Tornacum, was seized in 438 by the Frankish chieftain Clodion. In 880 it was pillaged by the Norsemen, and in 1192 it was placed under the protection of Philip II. It was fortified by Philip IV. in 1295, and was seized by Henry VIII. of England, Sep. 29, 1513. The proper administration of justice in the conquered towns of Terouanne and Tournay was duly provided for by 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1 (1514). Francis I, purchased it from Henry VIII. by a treaty concluded at London in Oct., 1518. It was taken by the Count of Nassau, the general of Charles V., in Dec., 1521, and annexed to Spanish Flanders. Charles V. ordered a Calvinist preacher, Peter du Breuil, to be burned alive at a slow fire in the public square, Feb. 19, 1545. In 1581 the Duke of Parma suppressed a rebellion of the inhabitants against the Spaniards. Louis XIV. captured Tournay in 1667, and re-united it to France; but in 1709 it was taken by the Allies under Prince Eugene and the Duke of Marlborough. By the treaty of Duke of Mariorough. By the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713, Tournay was ceded to Austria. The Barrier treaty, signed at Antwerp Nov. 15, 1715, confided the custody of it to the Dutch, who were soon compelled to evacuate it. Louis XV, seized it in 1745 (See FONTENOY, Battle), and demolished the fortifications; and the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 18, 1748, restored it to Austria. It was again seized by the French, Nov. 8, 1792, but was retaken by the Austrians April 30, 1793. The French, under Gens. Souham and Daendels, defeated the Austrians in a series of engagements before this city, May 11, 12, and 13, 1794. The Allies won a battle May 23. (See PONT-A-CHIN.) Gen. Pichegru seized it June 30, and annexed it to the French department [980]

of Jemmapes. It was finally relinquished by France by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814.

TOURNIQUET was invented by Morel in 1674. Young described a similar apparatus in 1679, and Petit (1674—1750) improved it.

TOURS (France), the capital of the department of Indre-et-Loire, anciently the principal town of the Turones (See Touraine), and called Cæsarodunum, conquered by Julius Cæsar B.C. 55, was included in the kingdom of the Visigoths, from whom it was taken by Clovis I. in The Northmen assailed it in 838 and 882. It fell into the hands of the Count of Blois about the middle of the 10th century. One of his successors ceded it to the Count of Anjou in the 11th century, from whom it passed by inheritance to Henry of England in 1152, and remained in the hands of the English till remained in the hands of the English infinally ceded to France in 1250. The Etats Généraux met here in 1468, 1484, and 1506. The castle of Plessis les Tours (q. e.) was in the neighbourhood. It lost half of its inhabitants, and nearly all its trade, by the revocation of the edict of Nantes, Oct. 22, 1685; and from this blow it never completely recovered. The eathedral, said to have been founded in the 4th century, was burned down in the 6th, rebuilt by Gregory of Tours (544—595), and again burned in the 12th century. The present building, the west front of which was erected by Henry V. of England, was completed in 1550. Councils were held here Nov. 7, 567; in 813; in 841; in Dec., 887; in 1050; in 1055; in 1060; in 1096; May 19, 1163; June 10, 1236; in 1239; Aug. 3, 1282; and in Sep., 1510. The abbey of St. Martin, after flourishing for 12 centuries, was destroyed during the Revolution in 1793. The town suffered severely from an inundation in June, 1856. (See PERONNE.) TOWCESTER (Northamptonshire).—This town, formerly styled Tosseter, is very ancient, and was a place of great strength in the time of the Saxons. The Danes failed in an attack upon it in 917, and in 921 it was re-fortified by Edward the Elder. The grammar-school was founded in 1552.

TOWER OF LONDON.—According to a tradition, for which there is little authority, Julius Cæsar (B.C. 54) founded this famous citadel; but no part of the existing structure is of earlier date than the White Tower, which was founded by William I. about 1078. The Tower was first used as a royal palace by Stephen in 1140. In 1235, Frederick II. of Germany presented Henry III. with three leopards, which were deposited here, and formed the basis of the celebrated menagerie. formed the basis of the celebrated menagerie. The regalia were also removed here during the reign of Henry III. (1216—72). Col. Blood's unsuccessful attempt to steal the crown jewels took place May 9, 1671. The last execution on Tower Hill, and the last decapitation in England, was that of Lord Lovat, April 9, 1747. The Horse Armoury was built in 1826, the menagerie was removed in Nov. 1834, and the Grand Storehouse, which had been founded by James II., was destroyed by fire Oct. 30, 1841. The moat was drained and converted into a garden in 1843, and the first stone of the Waterloo barracks was laid by the Duke of Wellington June 14, 1845.

TOWERS.—The most ancient tower on record is that of Babel, built soon after the Flood (B.C. 2247), and generally considered to be identical with the tower of Belus at Babylon, which was in existence in the time of Xerxes I. (B.C. 485—B.C. 465), who plundered it and then laid it in ruins. Towers were added to churches in the time of Charlemagne (768—814). A church is mentioned as having a tower in 837, and a chapel was built for the Emperor having two towers for bells, in 873. The round towers of Ireland, the origin of which has given rise to much controversy, were erected at various periods between the 6th and the 13th centuries, and are generally supposed to have been built for religious purposes.

TOWN.—The ancient Britons had no walled towns before the invasion of the Romans, B.C. Towns were answerable for felons' goods; but by 31 Edw. III. c. 3 (1357), if a town could allege anything in discharge of itself, and by anege anything in discharge of itself, and by which another became chargeable, it could be heard, and right administered. When a murderer escaped from a town, it was liable to a penalty by 3 Hen. VII. c. 1 (4,87).

TOWN COUNCIL, in the cities, boroughs, and towns of Great Britain and Ireland, is appointed and regulated by the provisions of the Municipal Reform Act (q, r).

TOWNLEY MARBLES, a collection of Greek and Roman sculpture, &c., formed by Charles Townley in Rome between 1765 and 1772 After his death Jan. 3, 1805), the collection of marbles and terracottas was exhibited to the public in the Townley Gallery in 1807. TOWTON (Battle).—This decisive battle was fought at the township of Towton, near Tadcaster, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, caster, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, between 40,000 Yorkists, under the great Earl of Warwick, and 60,000 Lancastrians, under the Duke of Somerset, on Palm Sunday, March 29, 1461, and resulted in the defeat of the latter, and the establishment of Edward IV. on the English throne. It is supposed that no less than 37,000 men fell in this encounter, which lasted from nine in the morning till seven in the evening. Snow fell in the faces of the Lancastrians, and the field in which the battle was fought is still called Palm Sunday Field.

TOXOPHILITES .- The Toxophilite Society was first established at Leicester House, London, in 1781; and their archery meetings were held in Bloomsbury Fields. They removed to Highbury Barn about 1826, and thence to Bayswater.

TRACTARIANISM .- This movement commenced with the publication of the Oxford tracts, called Tracts for the Times, in 1833, and speedily attracted attention, from its alleged Romish tendencies. In 1839 Dr. Pusey, Hebrew Professor at Oxford, addressed a letter on the subject to the Bishop of Oxford, wherein he repudiated this imputation; but the secession to Rome of the Rev. John Henry Newman, one of the authors of the tracts, in 1845, and afterwards of many other members of the party, proved that it was not altogether groundless. A meeting, composed of the vice-chancellor, heads of houses, and proctors, assembled at Oxford, March 15, 1841, and passed a resolution condemning these tracts. The receivers of this system are known as Anglo-Catholics, Puseyites, or Tractarians.

TRACT SOCIETIES.—The Society for Pro-

TRACT SOCIETIES.—The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge was established in London in 1608; the Religious Tract Society in 1799; the Religious Tract Society for Ireland in 1814; the English Monthly Tract Society in 1827; and the Weekly Tract Society in 1827.

GUILDS, &c.)

TRADE MUSEUMS AND SCHOOLS.—Bacon and Descartes propounded the idea of forming inuseums of industrial produce, &c.; but the first establishment of such institutions was effected by Jacques Vaucanson, who died Nov. 21, 1782. The French Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers was established in 1795, and in 1833 Metters was established in 1795, and in 1833, the system of trade muscums was introduced with most satisfactory results into Germany. The first efforts to establish anything of the kind in England, made in 1837, led to the formation of the Museum of Economic Geology. The Museum of Economic Botany at Kew was founded in 1848, and the Museum of Practical Geology and the School Museum of Practical Geology and the School of Mines in 1851. The balance remaining on hand after the settlement of the cash account of the Great Exhibition of 1851 was devoted to the establishment of a general museum of manufactures, &c., which was placed under the control of the department of Science and Art, and incorporated with the museum at South Kensington. A Museum of Irish Industry was established at Dublin in 1845, and the Edinburgh Scottish Industrial Museum was founded in 1853. Facilities for the estab-lishment of these institutions were afforded by the Public Libraries and Museums Act, 18 &

19 Viet. c 70 (July 30, 1855).

TRADES' UNIONS were illegal until the passing of 6 Geo. IV. c. 129 (1825). The arrest of two members of a trades' union caused a riot at Oldham, April 15, 1834, when the prisoners were rescued, and one rioter was shot. A meeting of 25,000 trades' unionists took place in Copenhagen Fields, London, to petition for the pardon of the Dorchester labourers, April 21, 1834. Attempts were made in 1865 and 1866 to employ the machinery of these associations for political purposes. In many parts of the country the workmen formed counter or non-union associations, in 1866, in order to protect themselves against the tyrainy of the trades' unions. (See STRIKES.)

TRADUCIANISM.— The controversy whether souls were derived by traduction or who maintained the former; and it was warmly

TRAEIS, or TRAIS (Battle).—The Crotoniats defeated the Sybarites on the banks of this river, in Bruttium, B.C. 510.

TRAFALGAR (Sea-fight). — Lord Nelson's made the vehicle for exhibiting considerable last and greatest victory over the combined ingenuity of stage effect. His greatest work fleets of France and Spain was gained off this cape of southern Spain, Oct. 21, 1805. The English fleet, consisting of 33 ships of the line and 4 frigates, was divided into two squadrons headed by Nelson in the Victory, and Collingwood in the Royal Sovereign. The French fleet consisted of 18 ships of the line, commanded by Admiral Villeneuve, and the Spanish force of Admirals Alava and Gravina amounted to 15 vessels of the line. The enemy had also five frigates. Immediately before the action, Nelson exhibited the ever-memorable signal, "England expects that every man will do his duty," which was no sooner perceived than enthusiastic cheers rose from the entire fleet. The Victory came into action at one o'clock, and was engaging the Redoutable, when a ball from the mizen-top struck Nelson in the left shoulder and occasioned the wound of which he died, at half-past four in the afternoon. Nineteen of the enemy's ships surrendered during the battle, and one was sunk. The remnant of their fleet was encountered by Sir. Richard Strachan, who took four ships, Nov. 4.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE (London), commenced in 1829, and finished in 1850, cost in granite work alohe upwards of £10,000. The fountains were erected in 1845. The Nelson column was erected Nov. 4, 1843. Chartist riots commenced in this square with the destruction of the hoarding round the base of Nelson's monument, March 6, 1848. Landseer's lions were completed in Feb. 1867.

TRAGABIGSANDA .- (See CAPE ANNE.) TRAGEDY.—The origin of tragedy may be traced to the choral songs chanted in honour of Bacchus, at the convivial meetings of the Greeks, which were first reduced to order by Arion, about B.C. 620, and which are mentioned as describing the sorrows of the god, and hence as partaking of the tragic element, as early as B.C. 600. They were afterwards rendered by performers disguised as Satyrs; hence the name of Tragedy, the Goat Song. Thespis added a single actor to the chorus, B.C. 535, and from this introduction of tragic dialogue is regarded as the founder of dramatic tragedy. Æschylus (B.C. 525—B.C. 456) gained the first prize awarded by the Greeks for this species of composition, B.C. 484, and added a second actor to the one introduced by Thespis. Sophocles (B.C. 495—B.C. 405) made his first public appearance in the competition of B.C. 468, in which he contended successfully with the veteran dramatist Æschylus; and B.C. 440 he produced his "Antigone," which is regarded as one of the finest productions of the Greek tragic muse. He also introduced a third speaker, and one of his dramas, the "Celipus in Colonus," which was not performed till after its author's death, required a company of four actors, besides the chorus. This was regarded as a most daring innovation. Euripides (B.C. 480-B.C. 406) introduced the prologue, and concluded most of his plays by the intervention of the gods, who appeared in the sky supported by machines, and arranged the plot by supernatural agency. This expedient, known as the deus ex machina, was made the vehicle for exhibiting considerable the "Medea," was produced B.C. 431. After the death of Euripides, tragedy declined in Greece, and in Rome it never attained great excellence. Livius Andronicus, who flourished B.C. 240; Nævius, B.C. 235; and Ennius, B.C. 239—B.C. 169, are the most celebrated Roman authors who attempted tragedy. Ten tragedies have been ascribed to Seneca, the philosopher (25-65); and although their authorship is disputed, and the works are very defective as dramas, internal evidence is in favour of the supposition. The earliest modern tragedy was the "Rosmunda" of Rucellai, written in Italian, and performed before Leo X, at Florence in 1515. It was the earliest example of blank verse, although the first drama of the or of orank verse, atmough the first trains of the kind performed or published was suggested by Trissino's MS. tragedy of "Sophonisba," which was published in 1524. Jodelle's "Cléo-patre," performed in 1552, is the first French tragedy; and Sackville's "Gorboduc," which was performed at Whitchall, in the presence of Elizabeth, in 1562, is the earliest tragic drama in English. (See Drama, Shakespeare's

TRAINING SCHOOLS.—The first training school was established by the Church of England National Society in 1811. An active movement for the formation of these schools was made by that society in 1838, and 41 were founded throughout the country by 1854.
TRAJAN'S PILLAR, or COLUMN, was erected on the Forum Trajani at Rome, by the architect Apollodorus, in 114, to com-memorate the triumph of the Emperor Trajan over the Dacians. The column, 144 Roman feet high, is considered one of the finest monu-ments of ancient art that has descended to modern times.

TRAMWAYS .- (See STREET RAILWAYS.)

TRANQUEBAR (Hindostan). - The Danes formed a settlement in this part of the Coro-mandel coast in 1617, and it was ceded to them in 1620. It was purchased by the English, Feb. 22, 1845.
TRANSALPINE GAULS entered Italy to assist the Cisalpine Gauls, B.C. 327, and were repulsed. The Romans invaded their country and founded a colony B.C. 122, and conquered them B.C. 51. TRANSFIGURATION.—This miraculous event in the life of our Saviour, when he took Peter, James, and John up into a high mountain, supposed to be Mount Tabor, and was transfigured before them, appearing in his glory in company with Moses and Elias (Matt. xvii. 1—9; Mark ix. 2—9, &c., &c.), is supposed to have occurred May 26, 29. (See FEASTS and FESTIVALS.) TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD.—(See BLOOD.) TRANSLATION.—The patriarch Enoch was translated to heaven for his piety (Gen. v. 24), B.C. 3017; and the prophet Elijah was translated to heaven in a chariot of fire (2 Kings

ii. 11), 895. TRANSMIGRATION .— (See GYMNOSOPHITÆ, METEMPSYCHOSIS, PYTHAGOREAN PHILOSOPHY.

TRANSPADANE REPUBLIC. - Lombardy was formed into a republic with this name in 1796. It was merged by Napoleon Buonaparte in the Cisalpine republic, organized by him early in 1797.

TRANSPORT. — (See Land Transport CORPS.)

TRANSPORTATION derived its origin from banishment, which was first introduced by 39 Eliz. c. 4 (1596), and enacted that such rogues as were dangerous to the inferior people should be banished the realm. The first statute in which the word transportation is used is 13 & 14 Charles II. s. 23 (1662), by which justices were authorized to transport such rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars as should be duly convicted and adjudged in-corrigible, to any of the English plantations beyond the seas. It was followed by 18 Charles II. c. 3 (1666), which gave a power to the judges, at their discretion, either to execute or transport to America for life the moss-troopers of Cumberland and Northum-berland. By Geol Let a (1771) continued moss-troopers of Cumberiand and Northumberland. By 4 Geo. I. c. 2 (1717), continued by 6 Geo. I. c. 2 (1719), this mode of punishment was brought into common operation. By these statutes the courts were allowed a discretionary power to order felons to be transported to America. The system of transportation to the American colonics lasted transportation to the American colonics lasted from 1718 to the commencement of the war, in 1775. The great accumulation of convicts in 1776 led to the establishment of the system of the hulks, by 16 Geo, III. c. 43. This was followed by 19 Geo, III. c. 74. (1778), ordering the crection of penitentiaries. Transportation was resumed, and George III., by two orders in council, dated Dec. 6, 1786, fixed upon the eastern coast of Australia, and the adjacent islands. The first band of convicts left England in May, 1787, and founded the colony of New South Wales in 1788. Return from transportation was punishable with death, until 4 & 5 Will. IV. (1834) reduced the penalty to transportation for life. The determination of the Government to give up transportation to Australia was announced in Parliament Feb. 10, 1853. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99 (Aug. 20, 1853), penal scrvitude (q. v.) was substituted for transportation, except for 14 years or for life. By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3 (June 26, 1857), persons under sentence of penal servitude may be transported.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the supposed change of the substance of the bread and wine in the Eucharist into the body and blood of Jesus Christ, was maintained by Paschasius Radbert in the oth century, but was opposed by Rhabanus Maurus, Ratramnus or Bertramnus, and Scotus Erigena. It was supported by Pope Sylvester II. (999—1003). The doctrine was established under the term transubstantiation at the Lateran council in 1215, confirmed by the Council of Trent, Jan. 18, 1562. It was one of the articles of the Romish Church rejected at the Reformation. (See Corpus CHRISTI.)

TRANSYLVANIA (Austria), the most eastern province of the Austrian empire, known to the Romans under the name of Dacia, was con-quered by the Hungarians under Stephen I. in 1004. Having been almost depopulated, it was colonized by German emigrants in 1143. Protestant refugees from all parts of Germany settled here after the Reformation, and these were augmented when the Archbishop of Salzburg expelled all his Protestant subjects in 1773. John Zapolya, with the assistance of the Turks, made it an independent principality in 1540. The Turks made it tributary to them in 1552, and Leopold I. conquered it in 1687. The Porte was compelled to renounce its supremacy over it by the peace of Carlowitz, Jan. 26, 1699, when it was united to Austria. It was erected into a grand principality by the Empress Maria Theresa in 1765.

TRAPPISTS.—The first abbey of La Trappe, in Normandy, was founded by Rotrou, Count of Perche, in 1140. Its revenues were greatly increased in 1214, and it continued to grow in wealth and reputation till the 15th century, when it was held in commendam, and from when it was neid in commendam, and from that time its domains were neglected, and the discipline of the monks was relaxed. They had acquired the title of the brigands of La Trappe in the middle of the 17th century. The abbey was bestowed in 1636 on Armand Jean le Bouthillier de Rancé, who, after leading a most luxurious life, suddenly, in 1662, renounced the world, gave up his rich benefices, and retired to La Trappe. He established a new rule, which bound the community to strict silence, hard labour, and total abstinence from wine, eggs, fish, and all seasoning to their simple diet of bread and vegetables. Rancé died Oct. 27, 1700, and the abbey continued to flourish till the revolution of 1789, when it was suppressed. Some of the Trappists sought refuge in Switzerland, but returned to their dilapidated monastery on the restoration of the Bourbons in 1815. A new church and monastery were built and consecrated with great pomp Aug. 30, 1833.
TRASIMENE.—(See THRASYMENE.)
TRAUTENAU (Battle).—In which the Prussians defeated the Austrians, after an obstinate engagement, inflicting a loss of nearly 4,000 men, and capturing several thousand prisoners and a large quantity of military stores, June 28, 1866. TRAVANCORE (Hindostan).—The East India Company established a factory at Anjengo, on the sea-coast of Travancore, in 1673. Travancore was included as an ally of the English in the treaty with the Sultan of Mysore in 1784, and was invaded and devastated in 1790 by Tippoo Sultan, who was compelled by the English to restore all that he had taken from the Rajah. Treaties of alliance between the English and the Rajah were made in 1795 and 1805. In consequence of some disputes, the English subdued the province in 1808-9, and at the request of the Rajah left a resident to manage it. An unsuccessful attempt to subvert English authority was made in 1812, and the subsidiary force was withdrawn in TRAVELLERS' CLUB (London) was founded in 1815. The house, built in 1832, was much damaged by a fire Oct. 24, 1850.

TRAVELLING was generally performed, in England, on horseback, till the reign of Mary (1553-58), when a kind of waggon was introduced. Elizabeth (1558-1693) frequently travelled on state occasions seated on a pillion 400. It was taken by the Romans during the behind the chancellor. A vehicle, described as the "Flying Coach," commenced running from Oxford to London, in one day, in 1669; and this was considered a most extraordinary performance. Flying coaches ran three times a week from London to the chief towns at the close of the reign of Charles II. (1660-85). They journeyed about 50 miles a day in summer, and 30 in winter. The passengers were seated inside the coach, it being too perilous, from the frequent accidents, to ride on the roof. The ordinary fares were $2\frac{1}{2}d$, the mile in summer, and more in winter. The coach between Edinburgh and London occupied from 12 to 14 days on the journey in 1763. The greater part of the carrying trade of the country was performed by pack-horses until the middle of the 18th century. Travelling was completely revolutionized by the introduction of railways in 1830.

TRAVENDAHL (Treaty) was concluded at the castle of Travendahl, in Holstein, between Charles XII, of Sweden and Frederick IV, of

Denmark, Aug. 18, 1700.

TREADMILL, invented by Sir William Cubitt, was introduced into English prisons

TRÉASON.—This crime was first defined in 1350, by the act known as the Statute of Treasons (25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2). Two kinds of treason were designated in it—viz. petit treason and high treason. The former was the murder of a husband by his wife, or a master by his servant, or a bishop by his subordinate in the Church; and the latter consisted in an attack upon the sovereign as the political head of the state. Petit treason was abolished by o Geo. IV. c. 31, S. 2 (June 27, 1828). (See High TREASON, IMPEACHMENT, LORD STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD, SANCTUARY, &c.) TREASURER OF THE CHAMBER, an officer of the royal household, first appointed i . 1541. The office was abolished in 1782.

TREATIES .- The celebrated commercial treaty concluded between Rome and Carthage, B.C. 509, is the earliest example of a formal international treaty extant. The first treaty concluded by England was signed with the Dauphin, Louis of France, at Kingston-upon-Thames, Sep. 11, 1217. The first commercial treaty was concluded between Edward I. and Guy, Earl of Flanders, in 1274. The most important treaties will be found under their title, or under the name of the places where they were concluded. See list in Index, under "Treaties."

TREBIA, or TREBBIA (Battles). - Near this river of Italy Hannibal gained his first decisive victory over the Romans, commanded by the Consul Sempronius, B.C. 218.—The French, under Macdonald, were engaged with the Austrians and Russians, under Suwarrow, June 17, 18, and 19, 1799. Though the first day's conflict was indecisive, the Allies were ultimately victorious, and Macdonald was compelled to retreat, having lost 18,000 men. TREBIZOND (Asia Minor), anciently called Trapezus, existed in the time of Xenophon, Mithridatic wars (B.C. 88—B.C. 63), and was a large and flourishing town in the reign of Valerian (253—60). Having been partially destroyed by the Goths, Justinian I. (527—65) restored the public buildings. Alexius Comnenus made it the capital of an independent principality in 1204, known as the Empire of Trebizond; and it remained in the hands of his deseendants till it was taken by the Turks in 1460.

TRECENTO, a flourishing period of Italian art and literature, which dates from the birth of Dante, in 1265, to the death of Boccaccio, in 1375. These two authors, with Petrarch, are termed "the Triumvirate of the Trecento."

TREE OF LIBERTY.-It is a common practice amongst the Republicans on the continent of Europe to inaugurate their rule by planting of Editors in additional trees of liberty. The first was planted at Paris by the Jacobins in 1790, and others during the Great Revolution in different parts of France. The custom, suppressed under the empire and the monarchy, was revived in July, 1830, and in 1848. Trees of liberty were planted in different Italian towns in 1848 and 1849.

TREMENTINE .- (See LA VENDÉE.)

TRENT (Austria), in the Tyrol, anciently called Tridentum, was a Roman colony, and became an important city in the Middle Ages, when the bishops were independent princes, and it was united to the Tyrol in 1363. The cathedral was built in 1212, and the Church of St. Maria Maggiore occupies the site of the council-chamber, where the Council of Trent met (Dec. 13, 1545—Dec. 3, 1563), and has a painting, with portraits of all the members. Trent was taken by the French, under Napoleon Buonaparte, Sep. 5, 1796, and again under Macdonald, in Jan., 1801. It was evacuated by them in April, 1809, and they were repulsed in an attempt upon it June 9, 1809. The in an attempt upon it June 9, 1809, 1809. Bavarians took Trent Oct. 17, 1809, and it was retaken by the Austrians Oct. 31, 1813. The tereentenary jubilee of the Council of Trent was celebrated in this city June 20—29, 1863.

TRENT AFFAIR.—During the war between the United and the Confederate States of America, the English mail-steamer Trent, on her passage from Havannah to St. Thomas, was boarded, Nov. 8, 1861, by the United States war-steamer San Jacinto, and Messrs. Slidell and Mason, the Confederate commissioners to London and Paris, were taken out. Great indignation was felt in England when the news of this outrage arrived, and at a cabinet council held Nov. 29, the Government resolved upon demanding the immediate restoration of the Confederate commissioners and an apology for the insult to the English flag. Messrs, Slidell and Mason were surrendered to Lord Lyons, the English ambassador at Washington, Dec. 28, 1862, and they reached England Jan. 29,

TRENTSCHIN (Battle).—The Hungarians were defeated by the Austrians at this place, the capital of a county of the same name, in Hungary, in 1708.

TRÉPORT (France).—This seaport town, at a short distance from Eu, the landing place of William II. in his war against Robert in 1090, was attacked by the English in 1296, 1339, 1340, 1433, and in Aug., 1523. Once a flourishing town, it has gradually declined.

TREVES, or TRIER (Prussia), the capital of a government of the same name, is considered the oldest city in Germany. According to an inscription on the Red-house, formerly the town-hall, it was built 1,300 years before Rome (B.C. 2053). It was a large and important town, and the capital of the Treviri, at the time of Julius Cassar's expedition into Gaul, B.C. 58, and was made a Roman colony by Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14), and named Augusta Trevirorum. The Emperor Gallienus held his court here in 255, and Constantine I. frequently resided here between 306 and 337. It was stormed and pillaged by the Alemanni 1355, by the Franks in 420, and by Attila in 451. Councils were held here in 385; in 927; Sep. 6, 948; Oct. 20, 1037; March 1, 1227; in 1238; April 28, 1310; in 1337; and April 26, 1423. It recovered its ancient splendour under the Archbishop of Trèves. The church of St. Simeon, the most important Roman monument in Germany, was probably built between 314 and 322, and was consecrated and dedicated to St. Simcon in the 11th century. It was restored by the Prussians, and opened July 23, 1817. The university, founded in 1454, greatly enlarged in 1722, was suppressed in 1794, and converted by the French into a central school. The church of Our Lady was built between 1227 and 1248, and the ancient electoral palace stands on the site of an immense Roman edifice, of which some fragments still remain, said to have been the residence of Constantine I. The English, under the Duke of Marlborough, took it in under the Duke of Marlborough, took it in 1704, and it was seized Aug. 9, 1704, by the French, to whom it was eeded by the peace of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801. It was occupied by the Allies in 1814, and was ceded to Prussia by the congress of Vienna, June 9, 1815. The exhibition of the "Holy Coat" (q. v.), in the cathedral, attracted 1,000,000 pilgrims here in 1814, and caused serious religious disputes, two of the leaders in which wave formelly. two of the leaders in which were formally excommunicated in 1845.

TREVISO (Italy), anciently called Tarvisium, an important town under the Goths and Longobards, was the native place of Totila, the last King of the Goths, killed in 552. On the destruction of the neighbouring town of Spitergium by Rotharis, King of the Longobards, in 641, the inhabitants took refuge here. It was the capital of a border province which extended from the Alps to the Adige, under Charlemagne and his successors, became an independent municipal community in the 11th century, and voluntarily submitted to the re-public of Venice in 1344. The Austrians were defeated here by the French in Jan., 1797, and the town revolted against Venice in April of the same year. An armistice was concluded here between the French and the Austrians, Jan. 10, 1501. It was invested by the Austrians June 10, 1848, and capitulated to them with its garrison of 4,185 men, June 13. knights of the military order of the Bath, adopted on the institution of the order by Henry IV. in 1399, and continued when the order was revived by George I., May 18, 1725.

order was revived by George 1., May 10, 1725.
TRIAL.—(See ASSAY, BURKING, EXECUTIONS, FORGERY, JURY, SEVEN BISHOPS, &C.)
TRIAL BY BATTEL, or ASSIZE OF BATTEL.—This mode of appeal, so prevalent in Europe under the feudal system, was of gradual growth, and extended ultimately to persons of every class and to nearly all cases, but more especially to those of murder and treason. It was introduced into England from Normandy, and is said to have been substituted for trial by ordeal by Henry III. in 1218. Michael (VIII.) Palæologus prohibited judicial combats in 126c. Louis IX. (1226—70) of France abolished it throughout the royal domains. A trial by battel was appointed in England under the sanction of the judges of the court of Common Pleas, in 1571, when Elizabeth interfered to prevent it. A remarkable case led to its abolition in this country. Abraham Thornton having been acquitted at the Warwick assizes, Aug. 8, 1817, of the murder of Mary Ashford, her brother William, deeming the verdict unsatisfactory, appealed against it. On being placed at the bar of the court of King's Bench, Nov. 17, 1817, the accused threw down his glove and challenged the accuser to mortal combat. The court eventually decided, April 16, 1818, in favour of the legality of this privilege, however obsolcte. The appellant declined the combat on account of his extreme youth, and the prisoner was discharged. The law was repealed by 59 Geo. III. c. 46 (June 22, 1819). TRIANON (France).—The name of two palaces at Versailles, the one called the Great Trianon, built by Louis XIV. about 1676, and the other the Lesser Trianon, built by Louis

XV. (1715—74).

TRIBES.—(See GALWAY.)
TRIBUNES OF THE PEOPLE.—Magistrates of Rome chosen from among the plebs to represent the people, B.C. 494. C. Licinius and L. Albinus were the first two, and they created three colleagues. The number was raised to 10 B.C. 457.

TRICHINOPOLY (Hindostan), the capital of a district of the same name in the presidency of Madras, was the capital of a Hindoo princiof Madras, was the capital of a Thintoo principality until 1732, when it was acquired by the Nabob of Arcot, who relinquished it to the Mahrattas in 1741. It was taken from them by Nizam-al-Mulk in 1743, and was besieged by the French in 1757. It was relieved by the rapid march of an English force, under Capt. Calliaud, May 26.

TRIDENTINE CATECHISM, - (See CATE-CHISM.

TRIENNIAL PARLIAMENTS were first established by 16 Charles I. c. 1 (Feb. 16, 1641). The act was passed for the purpose of preventing the sovereign from postponing at will, and frequently indefinitely, the assembling of the parliament. A statute of Edward III. (1327—77), providing that one should be held every year, or oftener if need be, had long fallen into neglect. The chief provisions of the Triennial Act were, that a parliament was to be ipso facto dissolved when it had lasted three years, and, if actually sitting at the time, on the first adjournment or prorogation; that writs for a new parliament were to be issued by the chancellor or keeper of the great seal within three years after the dissolution of the last; in case of his failure to perform this duty, the peers were enjoined to meet and issue writs to the sheriffs; in case of non-compliance with the law on the part of the peers, the duty devolved upon the sheriffs themselves; and in case of their failure, the electors, after a certain interval, had the right of choosing their representatives; and that no parliament was to be dissolved or adjourned, save by its own consent, in less than 50 days from the commencement of the session. This statute was violated by Cromwell and the Long Parliament, and was repealed by 16 Charles II. c. 1 (April 6, 1664). Another act of a similar character (6 & 7 Will. & Mary, c. 2, 1694), providing that a parliament should be held at least once every three years, and that no parliament should last longer than three years, was assented to with great reluctance by William III., Dec. 22, 1694; and it was repealed on the passing of the Septennial Act (q. v.).

TRIESTE (Illyria), the principal seaport of the Austrian empire on the Adriatic, existed in the time of the Romans, and is called by Pliny, Tergeste. It passed from Venice to Austria in 1382. It was a place of no importance till it was made a free port, in 1710. Its privileges were greatly extended by the Empress Maria Theresa in 1750. The town was captured by the French March 22, 1797; again May 22, 1809; and was ceded to Italy by the treaty of Schönbrunn, Oct. 14, 1809. The English and Austrians took it Oct. 31, 1813; and it returned to the dominion of Austria in and it returned to the dominion of Austria in

1814. (See OVERLAND MAIL.)
TRIFANUM (Battle.).—The Romans defeated the Latins at this ancient town of Italy, B.C.

TRIGONOMETRICAL SURVEY.—The first application of trigonometry to surveying was made by Willebrod Snell, in his survey of Holland, commenced in 1617. The first government survey in Great Britain was commenced in the Highlands of Scotland in 1747. It was stopped by the war of 1755, and the map was never published. The next undertaking was begun at Hounslow Heath in July, 1784. triangulation was commenced in 1791. A base of verification was measured at Salisbury Plain in 1794; at King's Sedgmoor, in Somersetshire, in 1798; at Misterton Carr, in North Lincolnshire, in 1801; at Rhuddian Marsh, near St. Asaph, North Wales, in 1806; and the survey of nearly all England, South Wales, and part so named before 670, which was the one of Sootland, was completed by 1809. The survey was stopped by the war from 1811 to 1816.

Reformation. Penalties imposed on persons
It was recommenced in Scotland in 1817; and denying the doctrine of the Trinity by 9 & 10 was transferred to Ireland in 1824, the principal triangulation of which was completed by 1838; and then Great Britain was again taken up. England, with the exception of the six northern counties and a small part of Scotland," had been surveyed on a scale of two inches, and engraved on a scale of one inch, to the mile; but the survey of the remainder of England, and of the whole of Scotland, was ordered to be taken on the Irish scale of six inches to the mile, by a Treasury minute, Oct. 5, 1840. A royal commission was appointed to inquire into the progress, 6c., of the survey, Dec. 24, 1857. According to their report the sums 1837. According to their report the sums expended in the survey up to March 31, 1858, were:—England and Wales, £1,051,678; Scotland, £374,746; and Ireland, £979,166. In the estimates for 1860-61, £99,000 were required for the survey, and the number of persons employed upon it was 1,627.

TRILLECK'S INNS.—(See New INN HALL.)
TRIMMERS.—A political party, of which Viscount Halifax was the chief, contemptuously called trimmers by the Whigs and Torics area in the region of Charles II. (1660-Torics, arose in the reign of Charles II. (1660-

TRINCHINIASIS, a disease caused by the ravages on the human muscle of a minute worm, prevailed as an epidemic in Saxony in 1862, at Hettstädt in Oct., 1863, and at Cheek-towaga, New York, in 1864. The small worm, the Trichina spiralis, was discovered by Professor Owen in 1835.

TRINCOMALEE (Ceylon).—This town came into the possession of the Portuguese in the beginning of the 16th century, and was taken from them in 1639, by the Dutch, who retained it till Jan. 11, 1782, when it was captured by the English. It was retaken by the French admiral Suffren, Aug. 31. Having been re-stored to the Dutch by the treaty of Versailles in 1783, the English retook it, after a siege of three weeks, Aug. 26, 1795; and it was ceded to them by the treaty of Amiens, March 25, 1802. The celebrated shrine, "the Temple of a Thousand Columns," was destroyed by the Portuguesc.

TRINIDAD (Atlantic Ocean), one of the West India islands, discovered by Columbus July 31, 1498, was first colonized by the Spaniards in 1588. It was captured by the French in 1676, but almost immediately restored; and it was taken by the English under stored; and it was taken by the English thater Aberfcrombie, Feb. 13, 1797, and ceded to them by the treaty of Amiens, March 25, 1802.

TRINITARIANS, BRETHREN OF THE HOLY TRINITY, or REDEMPTIONISTS.—
(See HOUNSLOW, MATURINES, &c.)

TRINITY.—This term was first used by Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, to express the three sacred persons in the Godhead, about 130. The first statement of the doctrine of the Trinity was made, in the Nicepe greed adouted. Trinity was made in the Nicene creed, adopted in 325, and completed at the second general council held at Constantinople in 381. The doctrine was more fully set forth in the creed of Athanasius, framed in the 5th century, and in the university, was demolished in 1742.

Will. III. c. 32 (1668), were removed by 53 Geo. III. c. 160 (1812). The festival of the Holy Trinity, ordered by John XXI or XXII. in 1320, was generally observed about 1405. (See

FLEUR-DE-LYS, ORATORIANS, SHAMROCK, &c.)
TRINITY COLLEGE (Cambridge) was formed of several smaller collegiate establishments, the chief of which were Michael House, dedicated to Michael the Archangel, founded dedicated to michael the Archangel, founded by Hervey de Staunton, chancellor of the Exchequer to Edward II., in 1324; King's Hall, founded by Edward III. in 1337; and Phiswicke's Hostle, founded by William Phis-wicke, or Fishwick, in 1393. Out of these three institutions, and the other smaller ones, Trinity College was founded by Henry VIII., by charter dated Dec. 19, 1546. He endowed it with lands, &c., of the annual value of £1,300, to maintain a master, 60 fellows, 40 scholars, and 10 almoners, reserving to the crown the right of choosing the master. Queen Mary (1553-58) commenced the building of the chapel, and added to the endowment lands to the value of £338 per annum. Elizabeth provided for the completion of the works commenced by her sister, by letters patent dated Dec. 14, 1560.

TRINITY COLLEGE (Oxford) was originally founded by Richard de Hoton, Prior of Durham founded by Richard de Hoton, Prior of Durham about 1290; rebuilt by Bishop Hatfield of the same see; and dissolved by Henry VIII. about 1541. Sir Thomas Pope purchased the site and buildings from Dr. George Owen and William Martyn, to whom they had been granted by Edward VI. In 1553, and founded the college for a president, 12 fellows, and eight scholars, in 1554. He founded four additional scholarships Sep. 10, 1557. There is also a scholarship nearly coeval with Sir T. Pope's foundation, which was founded by his relative Richard Blount, of London. An exhibition, Richard Blount, of London. An exhibition, called the Unton Pension, was given by Thomas Unton in 1693; another, called the Tylney Exhibition, was given by Frederick Tylney in 1720; and a third, for the advantage of superannuate scholars of Winchester College, was founded by the Rev. Edward Cobden in 1784. The hall was rebuilt in 1618. The library, though altered at various times, is the most property to the college, buying began built ancient part of the college, having been built in 1370. The chapel was founded July 9, 1691. The court was erected from the designs of Sir C. Wren, the north side having been completed in 1667, the west side in 1682, and the south side in 1728.

TRINITY HALL (Cambridge) was founded for the study of the canon and the civil law by William Bateman, Bishop of Norwich, in 1350, for a master, three fellows, and three scholars. The foundation was augmented by Simon Dalling in 1443, by Dr. Hewke in 1517, by Dr. Harvey in 1584, by Dr. Mouse in 1586, and by other benefactors. The college was further incorporated in the reign of Elizabeth (1558—662) and was governed by the structure of the 1603), and was governed by the statutes of the founder till 1860, when new statutes were enacted. The old hall, one of the most ancient

TRINITY HOUSE (London) .- This society was founded by Sir Thomas Spert, comptroller of the navy to Henry VIII., in 1515, and incorporated by that king in the same year, for the portated by that king in the same year, for the promotion of commerce and navigation, by licensing and regulating pilots, and ordering and erecting beacons, light-houses, buoys, &c. The corporation was confirmed in the enjoyment of its privileges and possessions by letters patent of James II. (1685). At first it seems to have consisted of seamen only, but now noblemen and gentlemen are amongst its members or elder brethren. It is governed by a master, four wardens, eight assistants, and 31 elder brothers. By 52 Geo. III. c. 39 (April 20, 1812), the jurisdiction of the Trinity House was extended to light-houses round the coast of Ireland. The ancient hall of the corporation at Deptford was pulled down in 1787, and the edifice near the Tower, commenced Sep. 12, 1793, was finished two years afterwards.

TRINITY SUNDAY is the Sunday next following the festival of Whitsuntide. The festival of the Holy Trinity was first ordained to be held on this day by Pope John XXI. or XXII.

TRINOBANTES, a British tribe which inhabited the counties of Essex and Middlesex at the time of Julius Cassar's invasion of Britain, B.C. 55. Their prince, Cassivelaunus, unsuccessfully opposed Casar's passage of the river Stour, B.C. 54; and, his chief town being afterwards taken, the tribe submitted to the Romans. Claudius I. defeated them in 43. They joined the Iceni under Boadicea in revolt, and destroyed the Roman colonies in their own country, but were defeated by Suetonius Paulinus, near Sunbury, on the Thames, in 61

TRIPLE ALLIANCE, between the States-TRIPLE ALLIANCE, between the States-General and England, against France, for the protection of the Spanish Netherlands, was ratified Jan. 23, 1668. Sweden joined the league April 25, and it then became known as the Triple Alliance.—Another, called the Second Triple Alliance, between England, France, and Holland, to oppose the designs of Cardinal Alberoni, the Spanish minister, was signed by the English and Franch Nov. 20 signed by the English and French Nov. 28, 1716, and by the Dutch at the Hague, Jan. 4, 1717. — A Triple Alliance between Great Britain, Russia, and Austria was concluded at St. Petersburg (c. v.), Sep. 28, 1795. (See Grand or Great Alliance.)
TRIPOLI, or TRABLUS (Asia Minor).—
This seaport of Syria, the capital of the pashalic of the same name, was taken in 1108 by the Crusaders, who destroyed the rare and valuable library of Persian and Arabic works, said to amount to 100,000 volumes. It was founded by Tyre, Sidon, and Aradus; hence the name Triple City, or Three Cities. The Egyptians, under Ibrahim Pasha, defeated nder Ioranim Pasna, defeated the Turks here April 7, 132; and the government was granted to Mehemet Ali, May 6, 1333. It was captured by the English in Sep., 1840.

TRIPOLI, or TRIPOLIS (Africa), the most easterly of the Barbary states, became a Roman province after the destruction of Carthage,

B.C. 146. The three cities of Œa, Leptis Magna. and Sabrate constituted a kind of federal union, under the name of Tripolis (Regio Tripounion under the name of Tripolis (Regio Tripo-litana). The capital, Tripoli, is identical with the ancient city of Ca. It suffered greatly from the tyranny of Count Romanus in 366; was conquered by the Vandals in the 5th century; and rescued by Belisarius in 534. Tripoli was taken by the Saracens in 638; besieged by the Egyptians in 877 and in 1054; seized by Roger, King of Sicily, in 1146; and retaken in 1184 by the Saracens who retained it fill it was by the Saracens, who retained it till it was by the Saracens, who retained it till It was conquered by the Spaniards in 1510. It was ceded by Charles V. to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem in 1530; and was conquered by Simon, basha for the Sultan Soliman I., in 1551, and became a Turkish pashalic. Dragut (died in 1565), the corsair, was appointed governor; and from this time it became one of those piratical powers which for centuries attacked the ships of Christian nations, and made slaves of their prisoners. The first treaty between Tripoli and England was concluded Oct. 18, 1662. Tripoli was bombarded by a French fleet in 1683. Hamet Caramandi, a Moorish chief, treacherously caused 300 Turkish officers to be strangled, and the garrison to be destroyed, in 1703, and thus threw off the Turkish yoke. Yussuf, the last basha of this family, was compelled by his subjects to abdicate in 1832; and a civil war ensued, which was put an end to by a Turkish force in 1835, and Tripoli was restored to the nominal sovereignty of the Turks. Piracy and slavery were abolished in 1816. Rebellions occurred in 1842 and 1844. Near the sea-gate of the town stands a magnificent triumphal arch erected to the Emperors M. Aurelius Antoninus and L. Aure-lius Verus, in 164.

TRIPOLITZA (Greece) is said to derive its name from the three towns of Tegea, Mantinea, and Pallantium, and was probably built soon after the capture of the last-named city by the Turks in 1458. Before the Revolution, Tripolitza was the capital of the Morea and the seat of a pasha. It was stormed by the Greeks Oct. 5, 1821, and 9,000 of the inhabitants of all ages and sexes were massacred on that and the following day. Ibrahim Pasha retook it June 30, 1825, and razed it to the ground, in retaliation for the cruelties perpetrated by the Greeks. It has since been

TRIREMES, ancient Greek and Roman vessels of war, having three banks of oars, invented by Ameinocles the Corinthian, B.C. 700. Other authorities say they were invented B.C. 703. They were first built by the Athenians at the instance of Themistocles, B.C. 481, and by the Romans B.C. 260.

TRITHEISTS, a sect which taught that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were three coequal distinct Beings, united by a common will and purpose, arose in the 6th century. It separated into Cononites and Philoponists, so called from the names of the leaders.

TRIUMPH.—A public and solemn honour conferred by the ancient Romans on a victorious general, by giving him a magnificent entry into the city, is said to have originated in the reign of Romulus, B.C. 753—B.C. 715. The triumph of the consuls Valerius and Horatius, B.C. 449, refused by the senate but granted by a vote of the people, was the first instance of a triumph without the authority of the senate. The triumph of Camillus, for the taking of Veii after a siege of 10 years, was celebrated with great pomp B.C. 395. There were two kinds of triumphs: the great, called the triumph; and the lesser, ealled the ovation (q. v.).

TRIUMVIRATES, so called from the number of men, three, constituting a board for the management of some public business among the Romans, one of which, the triumviri capitales, for inquiring into capital offeness, was instituted about B.C. 292. Julius Cæsar, Pompeius, and Crassus formed a triumvirate for earrying on the government, B.C. 6o. Another was formed by Octavianus Cresar, Marcus Antonius, and Lepidus, and afterwards sanctioned by a senatus consultum, B.C. 43. At the expiration of five years it was prolonged for five years more, B.C. 38. was prolonged for five years more, B.C. 36.
Augustus deprived Lepidus of his power B.C.
36. It legally expired on the last day of the year B.C. 33. One was appointed at Rome, consisting of Mazzini, Armellini, and Saffi, with the entire executive power placed in their hands, Feb. 27, 1849. (See TRECENTO.)

TRON, or TROND, ST. (Belgium). - An abbey was founded here in 657. The town, acquired by the bishops of Liége in 1227, was taken by Charles the Bold in 1467. The assembly which issued the Declaration of Independence of the Low Countries met here in 1566. The French took it in 1794.

TRONS (Switzerland).—The Swiss are said to have assembled at this village in 1400, and formed the Caddee League, and again in May, 1424, and formed the Grey League, or the League of the Grisons.

TROOP.—(See CAVALRY.)
TROPPAU (Austria).—A congress to consider the revolutionary excitement in Europe -the Emperors of Austria and Russia, and the King of Prussia, being present, together with representatives from France and England -was opened at this town in Austria, Oct. 20, 1820, sat till Dee., and was re-opened at Laybaeh, in Styria, Jan. 8, 1821.
TROUBADOURS, the poets of the Romanee

the earliest extant specimens of that literature by the songs of William, Duke of Guienne, written about 1096. "We do not," says by the songs of William, Duke of Gulenne, written about 1096. "We do not," says Hallam, "meet with any other troubadour till after the middle of the 12th century." From that time they became numerous. Having turned their powers of satire against the hierarchy during the persecutions of the Albigenses, many of them perished, or were compelled to make their escape, and the art calling about the and of the 12th calling about the and of the 12th century. declined about the end of the 13th century. The magistrates of Toulouse established an academy called Del Gai Saber,—of the Gay Seience (q. v.), with the object of reviving it, and held the first meeting of an annual festival, "Floral Games," which was attended by many poets from various parts of Languedoe, May 1, 1324.

TROUVERES .- The writers of romance and poetry in the French provinces north of the boots in the production of short tales, known as the "Fabliaux," in the latter half of the 12th century. The early trouvères were generally attended by a jongleur. They continued to make their appearance down to the the tentury. The period most prolific in this literature was, however, from 1226 to 1270.

TROY.—(See Lilum, or Lulon.)

TROY (N. America).—This city of New York, founded by the Dutch in 1752, was incorporated in 1801. It was nearly destroyed by fire in 1862.

TROYES (France), the ancient Augustobona, was saved from Attila through the address of its bishop, St. Loup, in 441. The eathedral, founded in 872, was rebuilt in the 15th and 16th centuries. The Normans plundered and burned it in 889. Troyes, which became the residence of the counts of Champagne in 1019. was taken by the Duke of Burgundy in 1415. was taken by the Dike of Burgundy in 1415. Councils were held here in 429; April 2, 1104; in 1107; Jan. 13, 1128, and in 1103. The marriage of Henry V. of England with Catherine of France, and the treaty securing the succession of Henry to the crown of Charles VI., were arranged here May 21, 1420. It was surrendered by the English to Joan of Arc, in 1420. It was nearly destroyed by fire in 1181 and in 1524. By a royal ediet the French Parliament was banished here Aug. 15, 1787, and recalled Sep. 20. Napoleon I. fell back upon Troyes Sep. 20. Napoleon I. fell back upon Troyes after his defeat by the Allies, Feb. 2, 1814, but withdrew Feb. 6, and the Allies entering Feb. 7, established their head-quarters. Napoleon I, again obtained possession of the town Feb. 23, and it was recaptured by the Allies March 4

TROY WEIGHT, so ealled from Troyes, in France, whence it was introduced into England, is mentioned as a known standard in 1414. The pound did not take the name till 1495. It was established in Scotland in 1618. TRUCE. — (See Flag of Truce, Hango, ODESSA, &c.)

TRUCE or PEACE OF GOD. - This celebrated instrument for the suspension of hostilities between the feudal lords of the Middle Ages, dating as far back as 988, at first extended to all the festivals of the Church, and then to the interval between Wednesday evening and Monlanguage, or Langue d'Oc, are represented in day morning, or from Advent to Epiphany, or Quinquagesima Sunday to Easter. This truce received great authority from a vision stated to have been seen by a bishop of Aquitaine in 1032, when an angel was said to have appeared and delivered a written document enjoining men to cease from their hostilities, and become reconciled. It was confirmed by the Council of St. Giles, in Languedoc, Sep. 4, 1042; by the Council of Tuluje, June 1, 1047; of Narbonne in 1054; of Gironne in 1068; of Troyes, March 11, 1093; of Clermont, Nov. 18

—28, 1095; of St. Omer, July 14, 1099, and many others; but in consequence of its inefficiency, an association for carrying it into effect was formed about the end of the 12th century, under the title of the Brotherhood of God. Louis IX, of France published an ordinance in 1245, prohibiting any one from commencing a quarrel until 40 days after the commission of the offence he wished to retaliate. This law, which was known as the Royal Truce, was confirmed by Philip IV. (the Fair) in 1296.

TRUCK SYSTEM, by which workmen are paid in goods instead of coin, is prohibited by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 37 (Oct. 15, 1831). A select committee reported to Parliament in 1842 that it flourished in defiance of the law.

TRULLAN, or COUNCIL IN TRULLO.—

(See QUINISEXTUM COUNCIL.)

TRUMPETS. - The invention has been ascribed to the Tyrrhenians as well as to the ascribed to the Tyrrienians as well as to the Egyptians, but they were not used at the siege of Troy, B.C. 1184, although spoken of by Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927). Those used by the Israelites at the siege of Jericho, B.C. 1451, were made of rams' horns (Joshua vi. 20). The speaking-trumpet appears to have been known to the ancient Greeks, and was in use among the Peruvians in 1595. Matthew Paris says that trumpeters preceded King Offa of Mercia in all his progresses (755—796). The Feast of Trumpets was instituted B.C. 1490 (Levit. xxiii.

TRUXILLO (Central America), in Honduras, founded by Las Casas in 1524, was destroyed by the Dutch in 1643.

TRUXILLO (S. America), in Peru, founded by Francisco Pizarro, and named after his

by Francisco Plastro, and hamed after me native place, in 1535.

TRUXILLO (S. America).—This town of Venezuelt, founded in 1570, was taken by the bucancers in 1678. Walker, the Filibuster, was executed here Sep. 12, 1860.

TRUXILLO, or TRUJILLO (Spain), existed in the time of the Roman occupation, and was taken by the Money in 1232. Francis Pizarro taken by the Moors in 1233. Francis Pizarro was born here in 1475, and died here June 26, TUAM (Bishopric).—This Irish diocese was founded by St. Jarlatto, at Cluain-fois, near Tuam, about 501. In 1152 it was made archiepiscopal, under Edan O'Hoisin; and in 1559 it was enlarged by the addition of Mayo. The see of Enachdune was annexed to Tuam in 1573, and Kilfenora formed part of the archbishopric from 1661 to 1742. Ardagh was incorporated with Tuam in 1742, but was separated in 1839, when Tuam ceased to be a metropolitan diocese. By the Church Temporalities Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), the sees of Killala and Achonry were ordered to be annexed to Tuam on their next voidance, which occurred in 1834.

TUBINGEN (Germany).—The university of this town of Wirtemberg was founded in 1477, and the library was added in 1562. From the Reformation till 1803, Roman Catholics were excluded. The town-hall was built in 1455; and the church of St. George, with monuments of the princes of the house of Würtemberg, was erected in the 15th century. In order to conciliate the aristocracy, Ulric, Duke of Würtemberg, agreed to a treaty here in July, 1514, which may be called the first German consti-tution, and continued to be the fundamental law of the duchy till 1819. The French took it in 1688.

TUBULAR BRIDGES .- The first tube of the Britannia bridge, across the Menai Strait, was floated and raised June 20, 1849. It was completed at a cost of £621,865, and opened March 5, 1850. The tubular bridge at Conway, also on the line of the Chester and Holyhead railway, constructed at a cost of £110,000, was finished in 1848. One at Chepstow, across the Wye, was opened in 1852. The first stone of the Victoria bridge, over the St. Lawrence, in Canada, was laid July 20, 1854, and the first train was constructed and the first train was constructed and the standard of the construction of the standard and the standard constructions. train passed over it Dec. 17, 1859. Two tubular bridges on the line of the Egyptian railway, —one crossing the Nile, near Benha, the other the Karrimeen canal,-were commenced in

May, 1853, and completed in Oct., 1855. TUCUMAN, or SAN MIGUEL DE TUCU-MAN (S. America), was founded in 1685. The Spaniards were defeated here in the war of independence in 1812, and a congress of the provinces of the Confederation of the Rio de la Plata, held here in 1816, proclaimed their independence.

TUDELA (Battle). — The French, under Lannes and Victor, defeated the Spanish forces of Castanos and Palafox, near this town of Spain, Nov. 23, 1808. The loss of the Spaniards amounted to 5,000 men killed and wounded, and but for the delay of Marshal Ney in quitting Soria, their entire army would have been cut off. It is sometimes called the battle of the Ebro, because it was fought on the banks of that river.

TUDORS reigned in England from 1485 to 1603. (See Henry VII., Henry VIII., ED-ward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth.) TUESDAY.—The third day of the week was dedicated by the Saxons to their god Tuisco, respecting whose attributes little is known. The Romans held it sacred to Mars, and called it Dies Martis. (See SHROVE TUESDAY.)

TUGENDBUND, or LEAGUE OF VIRTUE, formed in Prussia by Baron Stein about 1807. At first merely an association of literary and scientific men, who met at Königsberg, it became about 1810 a secret society, and the members pledged themselves to free Germany from the tyranny of Napoleon I. It was dissolved in 1815.

TUILERIES (Paris).—A small house, called the Hôtel des Tuileries, from the tile fields around it, existed here in 1342. Francis I. purchased it in 1518 for his mother, and Cathelical Medici shows it for the site of a part. rine de Medici chose it for the site of a new palace commenced in 1564. Louis XIII. (1610-43), who completed it, made it his residence. The gardens, commenced in 1600, were completed by Le Notre (1613-1700). It was captured and sacked by the Paris mob, Aug. 10, 1702, and again July 28, 1830. The insurrectionists seized it, and threw the furniture from the windows, Feb. 24, 1848.

TULA, or TOULA (Russia), capital of a goround it the same name, was founded in 1500, and is the seat of the imperial manufactory of arms, established by Peter I. in 1712. A fire, which reduced a large portion of the inhabitants to beggary, occurred in

TULIP, which grows wild in the Levant, was brought in seed from Constantinople, or Cappadocia, to Augsburg, in 1559, and had spread all over Germany by 1564. It was first planted in Provence, on the ground of Peyresc, in 1611. From Vienna it was introduced into England about the end of the 16th century. The tulip-tree was brought from

N. America to Europe about 1663.
TULIP-MANIA originated in Holland in 1637. It is said that 13,000 florins were paid for a single bulb.

TUNBRIDGE, or TONBRIDGE (Kent).—The castle dates from the 13th century, and the grammar-school was founded in 1553.

TUNBRIDGE, or TONBRIDGE WELLS
(Kent), was first brought into notice by Dudley, Lord North, who discovered the springs in 1606, and received much benefit from drinking the waters

TUNGSTEN, from the Swedish tung sten, heavy stone, was first obtained in a pure metallic state in 1781.

TUNIS (Africa), occupying the site of Carthage (q. v.), known at different periods as Tunes and Tuneta, capital of the regency of that name, founded cither by the Phenicians or by native Africans, was taken by the Roman consul Regulus B.C. 256. He was defeated in consul Regulus B.C. 250. He was ucleated in the plain and made prisoner by the Cartha-ginians, B.C. 255. The mutinous Carthaginian army encamped before it on leaving Sicca, B.C. 241. The Vandals, who acquired it in 439, were dispossessed by Belisarius in 533. It was taken from the Greek emperors by the Mos-lems about the end of the 7th century, and after having been governed by viceroys, was made the capital of an independent state by Abu-Ferez in 1206. An expedition to put down the pirates that infested it was undertaken by Louis IX. of France, who died here of the plague, Aug. 25, 1270. The pirate Barbarossa, whom the Turkish sultan had acknowledged chief of the country, deprived the ruler of his throne in 1531. He was, however, restored, on condition of being a tributary prince, by Charles V., who captured Tunis June 25, 1535. A large expedition, fitted out at Constantinople, reduced it in 1574. Admiral Blake destroyed two of the eastles with artillery in 1655, and extorted a promise that English vessels should be exempt from attack; and with a similar object it was besieged by a

French fleet in 1685... A bey was instituted in 1574, and he was replaced by a dey towards the end of the 17th century. The European powers enforced from Tunis the abolition of Christian slavery in 1816. The bey gave his subjects a new constitution in 1860. A serious insurrection, which broke out in Tunis in April, 1864, lasted several months. TUNNAGE AND POUNDAGE.—Tunnage was a duty of so much per tun on all wines imported; and poundage was a duty imposed ad valorem, at the rate of 12d. in the pound on all merchandise. The origin of this tax, the first of our customs duties, raised, according to the old statutes, "for the defence of the realm and the safeguard of the seas," is unknown. It was imposed with the consent of the Lords, but against that of the Commons, by Edward III., in 1348, and was granted for a term of two years to Richard II. in 1361. It was first levied by statute by 12 Edw. IV. It was first levied by statute for a few years, it was given to Henry VI. in 1453 for the term of his life. It formed a constant subject of dissension between Charles I. and his parliaments, and was granted to his son Charles II. for life, June 24, 1666. The impost, made perpetual by 9 Anne, c. 6 (1711), by 1 Geo, I. c. (21715), and by 3 Geo, I. c. 7 (1717), was abolished by 27 Geo. III. c. 13 (1787).

TUNN EL.—Two tunnels, constructed as outlets for the drainage of Lake Copais in Greece, the Lords, but against that of the Commons, lets for the drainage of Lake Copais in Greece. by the Minyæ of Orchomenus, at a period of which no authentic records exist, were cleared of obstructions about B.C. 330. The tunnel at Samos, by Eupalinus of Megara, nearly a mile in length, eight feet in height and breadth. with an aqueduct in the middle 30 feet dcep, was cut through a mountain 900 feet high, about B.C. 540. The Posilipo, near Naples, three-quarters of a mile in length, was executed about 14. A tunnel three miles long, 30 feet in height, and 28 feet wide, connecting Lake Fucinus with the river Siris, formed by the Emperor Claudius I. in 52, has been cleared out by the Neapolitan Government. The Harecastle tunnel, on the Grand Trunk canal, 2,880 castic tunnel, on the Grand Trunk canal, 2,880 yards in length, 12 feet wide, and 9 high, was commenced by Brindley in 1766. It proved too small for the traffic, and a new one, running parallel with the old, was constructed by Telford in 1822. (See ALPS, Tunnel; THAMES TUNNEL, &c.)

TURAN (Asia).—The name given by the Persians to the territory to the north of Persia, and sometimes used to designate Tur-

Persia, and somethies used to designate the kestan. The people were called the Turani. TURCKHEIM (Battle).—Turenne, at the head of the French army, defeated the Impe-rialists, near this town, Jan. 5, 1675, and com-pelled them to retire from Alsace. TURCOMANS, or TURKOMANS.—(See

TURKEY.)

TURCOPOLIER, of the order of the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and third dignity in the convent, taking its name from the Turcopoles, a light horse used by the Christians in Palestine, is mentioned in a diploma of the Hospitallers in 1180. One was established in the convent at Rhodes, Giovanni de Buibralk being the first known English knight who held the dignity, in 1328. The last Turcopolier of England was Sir Richard Shelley, who is believed to have died at Venice about 1582.

TURIN (Italy), the ancient Augusta Taurinorum, was burned by the soldiers of Vitellius during the civil war in 69. On a plain near this city Constantine I. defeated Maxen-tius in 312. By an edict of Lothaire I., schools were ordered to be established here in 829. Philip I. of Savoy fixed his residence at Turin in 1280, and Amadeus VIII. made it the capital in 1418. Charles VIII. of France arrived here, after breaking through the allied forces, in 1495. It was captured by Francis I., who had, without a shadow of cause, declared war against the Duke of Savoy, in 1536. Charles Emanuel I. enlarged it in 1620, and further improvements were made in 1673 and in 1702. Prince Thomas, in asserting his claim to the regency, made himself master of the city in 1639; but the French, under Count d'Harcourt, compelled him, after a short siege, to capitulate in 1640. The Duke de la Feuillade invested it with 100 battalions and 140 pieces of cannon in May. Prince Eugène came to its relief, and an engagement took place, in which the French were defeated, with a loss of 5,000 killed and 7,000 prisoners, Sep. 7, 1706. The Allies took it from the French by surprise in 1799. It was again given up to the French June 24, 1800, and was surrendered by them May 30, 1814. An insurrection took place, and the Spanish constitution was proclaimed, March restored April 12. La Gran Madre de Dio, an imitation of the Pantheon at Rome, was erected to commemorate the restoration of the royal family in 1814. The university, with a library of above 100,000 volumes, was founded in the control of the royal family in 1814. The university, with a library of above 100,000 volumes, was founded in the control of the royal family in 1814. in 1412; the Academy of Painting in 1777; the Royal Academy of Sciences in 1783; and the Waldensean church Dec. 15, 1853. In consequence of political disturbances which occurred among the students at Turin, April 27, 1864, the university was closed for some time. The treaty between France and Italy, concluded Sep. 15, 1864, arranged for the removal of the Italian Government from this city to-Florence, and riots occurred in consequence of the decision, Sep. 21—23. Another insurrection occurred Jan. 30, 1865, and the Italian Parliament met here for the last time May 16. (See FLORENCE.)

(Treaties) .- Several treaties have TURIN been concluded at this city, the principal being :-

TURKESTAN, TURKISTAN, or INDE-PENDENT TARTARY (Asia), "the country of the Turks," sometimes called Turan, was traversed by Alexander III., B.C. 331. The Grecian dynasty of Bactria obtained supreme power over the greater portion about B.C. 323. They were subverted B.C. 120 by the Scythians, who were in turn subdued by the Parthians about the commencement of the Christian æra. It was visited by ambassadors from Justinian I. in 559, subdued by Timour in 1383, and afterwards divided into several smaller states. (See BOKHARA, KOKAND, TACHKEND, &c.)
TURKEY, AND TURKS.—Dr. William

Smith, who states that almost all the nomad Asiatic tribes that devastated Europe from the 4th to the 12th century belonged to this race, gives, in a note to his edition of Gibbon (vol. iii. ch. xxvi. p. 303), the following as the principal divisions of the Turks:—"1. The Ouigours, on the west of the Mongol frontier, the most anciently civilized tribe of the Turkish race. 2. Turks of the Sandy Desert, conterminous with Mongolia and Tibet. 3. Turks of Khoten, Kashgar, and Yarkend, conterminous with Tibet. 4. The Kirghis, in Independent Tartary. Tibet. 4. The Kirghis, in Independent Tartary. 5. The Uzbeks, the Turks of Bokhara. 6. The Turkomans (See White Sheep), inhabiting the Persian frontier of Independent Tartary, from Balk to the Caspian. 7. The Osmanli, or Ottoman Turks, the Turks of the Turkish empire. 8. The Nogays, dwelling north of the Caucasus, between the lower Don and the lower Volga. o. The Turks of the Russian empire. ro. The isolated Yakuts of the Lena." This learned author is of opinion that, although the name of the Turks first became known in Europe in the 6th century, the people themselves had appeared a century earlier, as the Huns belonged to the Turkish stock. The Turks of Mount Altai, or the Golden Mountain, in Tartary, in the 6th century, worked at the iron forges, and were, according to Gibbon (ch. xlii.), "the most despised portion of the slaves of the great khan of Geougen." They had a tradition that their leader, Bertezena, or Berte-Scheno, having distinguished himself in wars against the neighbouring tribes, demanded in marriage the daughter of the khan, that his suit was rejected with scorn, and that he afterwards married a princess of China, and in a great battle defeated the nation of the Geougen, establishing the dominion of the Turks, who pursued their career of aggression, passing from Asia into Europe. Having subdued the Avars, with whom they are often confounded. they in 558 sent an embassy to Justinian II. at Constantinople. An alliance was concluded, and the ratification of the treaty was taken by the Roman minister to Mount Altai. They waged war against the Persians and the Arabs. and extended their dominions as far as China. The Eastern Turkomans dwelling on the shores of the Caspian, who quitted their native seat in the 10th century, about 1037 raised Togrul Beg, or Bey, the grandson of Seljuk, to the throne, and he founded what is termed the Seljukian dynasty. He expelled the Ghiznevides from the Eastern parts of Persia in 1038, invaded the Roman empire in 1050, entered

Bagdad in triumph in 1055, and overthrew the dynasty of the Bowides (q, v.) in 1059. Under Alp Arslan the Turks conquered Armenia and Georgia (1065—68), defeated the army of Romanus IV. in Aug., 1071, and afterwards took the emperor prisoner. Malek Shah, Alp Arslan's successor (he died in 1072), made further conquests both in Asia and in Europe. Asia Minor was subdued between 1074 and 1084, and Jerusalem taken in 1076, where the Turks established their rule. (See CRUSADES, MOHAM-MEDANISM, SARACENS, &c.) Malek Shah died in 1092. The vacant throne was disputed by his brother and his four sons, and a treaty for the division of the empire was concluded. It was reunited for a short time by Sandjar (1116—1157), and again divided. Finlay (Hist. of Byzantine and Greek Empires, vol. ii., Appendix) gives the following list of some of the principal dynasties :-

In the meantime the tribe of the Kayi, which, led by Soliman Shah, had, in 1234, taken refuge in Armenia, was rising in importance. Soli-man Shah, who resolved to return to his native seat in Khorassan, was on the march drowned in crossing the Euphrates. His followers separated, one portion continuing the journey, and the other remaining under Ertoghrul, one of the four sons of Soliman Shah. For assistance rendered in battle against the Mongols to the Sultan of Koniah, he was rewarded with territory near Angora, soon increased by other acquisitions, and at his death in 1288 was succeeded by his son Othman, or Osman, the founder of the Ottoman empire

TURKEY RED.—(See Dyeing.)

TURKEYS were introduced into England from America about 1524, and served up at a great banquet in 1555. When Charles IX. passed through Amiens, the authorities of the town made him a present of a dozen in 1566; and the first served up in France was at the wedding dinner of that monarch in 1570. They were introduced into Germany about 1530. TURKISH BATHS, also called Arabian, Eastern, Moorish, or Roman Baths, in inita-tion of the baths used by the ancients (See BATHS), were noticed by Mr. David Urquhart, in his "Pillars of Hercules," published in 1850. A Turkish bath was constructed at a Water Cure establishment at Blarney, in Ireland, in 1856, and another at Mr. David Urquhart's residence at Lytham, in 1857. Several private baths of the kind were made, and the first public Turkish bath was opened and the first public runsing that was opened in London in 1860.

TURKMANSHAL.—(See TOURKMANTCHAL.)

TURNAU (Bohemia). — The church was built in 1825. (See PocLoc, Battle.)

TURNER COLLECTION, consisting of the works of Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775) Dec. 19, 1851), were by him bequeathed to the nation on condition that a suitable place should be provided for their reception. At first exhibited at Marlborough House, and afterwards at the South Kensington Museum. they were removed to the National Gallery in

TURNHOUT (Battle).—Prince Maurice of Nassau, assisted by English auxiliaries under Sir Francis Vere, gained a decisive victory over TURNING.—This art is very ancient, as the lathe (q, v) was in use as early as B.c. 600, and probably much earlier. Sir Mark Isambard Brunel's block machinery for turning ships' blocks was completed in 1806, and occasioned a saving of £24,000 the first year it was brought into operation. The Turners were incorporated in 1604.

TURNPIKES, TOLLS .- A grant of a penny for every waggon passing through a manor in Gloucestershire was made in 1267. Edward III. granted permission to levy a toll on vehicles passing along the road from the hospital of St. Giles's in the Fields to Temple Bar in 1346, and another on all goods conveyed by land or water to the market at Westminster in 1353. The turnpike system was established in England by 15 Charles II. c. 1 (1663), which ordered places for the collection of toll to be established on the roads of Hertfordshire, Cambridge, and Huntingdon. It was afterwards extended to the whole kingdom by 7 Geo. III. e. 40 (1767). Twenty-seven turnpikes in London and its neighbourhood were abolished in one day by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 24 (June 14, 1827). By 26 & 27 Vict. c. 78 (July 28, 1863), which came into operation July 1, 1864, no less than 81 gates and bars in London on the north side of the Thames were abolished, and many others have since been removed. (See REBECCA RIOTS.)

TURPENTINE-TREE was introduced into England from Barbary before 1656.

TURRET SHIPS .- (See Cupola or Turret

TURTLE was introduced into England as an article of food between 1740 and 1750. It had been used for this purpose in the West Indies long before that time.

TUSCALOOSA CRUISER .- The Confederate cruiser Alabama, Capt. Semmes, captured the U.S. trading vessel Conrad, off the coast of Brazil, June 21, 1863. The prize, which carried a cargo of wool, was named the Tuscaloosa, and being commissioned as a ship of war in the Confederate service, accompanied the Alabama as tender. In this capacity she entered Simon's Bay, S. Africa, Aug, 8, and was acknowledged by the colonial authorities at the Cape of Good Hope as a lawful vessel of war. The United States consul protested against this proceeding, Aug. 10, alleging that as she had not been condemned by any prize court, and still carried part of her original cargo, her reception constituted a breach of ncutrality on the part of the colonial government. The question was referred to the law officers of the crown, who reversed the decision of the attorney-general at the Cape, and ruled that the Tuscaloosa should have been detained by the colonial authorities until reclaimed by her original owners. This opinion was communicated by the Duke of Newcastle to Sir P. Wodehouse, governor at the Cape of Good Hope, in a despatch dated Nov. 4, and led to the detention of the vessel on her return to port, Dec. 26. Lieut. Low, the officer in command, protested against this act, Dec. 28, and the governor reported what had taken place to the home authorities, Jan. 11, 1864. The reply of the Duke of Newcastle was contained in two despatches bearing date March 4 and 10, which directed the release of the Tuscaloosa, with a warning to Capt. Semmes not to bring his prizes into English ports.

TUSCAN ORDER, the simplest of the five orders of classical architecture, was invented by the Romans or the Etruscans; whence its name. It is regarded as an Italian modification of the Doric order.

TUSCANY (Italy), the ancient Etruria (q.v.), was called by the later Latin writers Tuscia, and its inhabitants Tusci, gradually corrupted into Toscana, or Tuscany, and Tuscans. During the Middle Ages its most important cities, such as Florence, Lucca, Pisa. Pistoja, and Siena became independent republics; but the majority were absorbed in the republic of Florence, which was made the capital of the grand duchy of Tuscany by Cosmo de Medici in 1569.

TUSCULUM (Italy) was founded, according to tradition, by Telegonus, son of Ulysses and Circe, about B.C. 1220. Having become a dependency of Alba, it recovered its liberty about B.C. 641. It supplied a contingent to the confederated army of the Latin cities, raised by the influence of the exiled Tarquinius, which was defeated by the Romans B.C. 493. (See LAKE REGILLUS, Battle.) It was attacked by the Volsci and the Æqui B.C. 467, and received assistance from Rome against its assailants, in return for which the Tusculans aided the Romans in recovering the Capitol from the Sabines, s.c. 458. War having been declared against it by the Romans, Camillus, at the head of the army, on entering the city, found the people engaged in their ordinary occupations, and received a most friendly welcome (a proceeding that led to a closer alliance between the two powers), B.C. 378. With Roman aid, the Latins, who had besieged it, were defeated, B.C. 374. It suffered severely from the Gauls B.C. 357; and although it took part with the Latins against the Romans, at the close of the war was treated with great indulgence by the victors, B.C. 335. For several centuries, its counts held so much power in Rome that they could almost insure the elevation of their own nominee to the papal chair. Continued contests between the two cities in the 12th century led to the destruction of Tusculum, according to Romualdus, in 1168, during the pontificate of Alexander III.; or, according to the account of Richard de S. Germano, by the German Emperor in 1191. (See FRASCATI.)

TUTBURY (Staffordshire) was the place of imprisonment selected for Mary Queen of Scots in 1568, after her removal from Bolton. was placed in the castle, under charge of the Earl of Shrewsbury.

TWELFTH-DAY.— The feast of the Epiphany (q. v.) is so termed because it is celebrated 12 days after Christmas. The custom of the diag feasts on this day, presided over by a king and queen, chosen by lot, is of great antiquity, and is regarded by some as a relic of the classical custom of appointing a rex convivii. Others state that it is derived from a practice among the Roman children of drawing lots with beans, to see who should be king; and as an old mode of deciding the question was for a cake to be made containing a bean and a pea, the receivers of the portions containing these being selected as king and queen, this supposition receives some confirmation; hence it is called the Bean-King's Festival. The observance of Twelfth-day and the appointment of a king and queen are common in most parts of Europe. In 1792 the French National Assembly ordered the name of the day to be changed from "La fête de Rois" to that of "La fête de Sans-Culottes." (See THREE KINGS.)
TWELVE TABLES. — The decemvirs

appointed at Rome B.C. 451, drcw up a code of civil law, which was engraved upon to tables of brass, and called the Ten Tables. Two more were added B.C. 450, and the code received the name of the Twelve Tables.

TWYFORD.—(See TIVERTON.)

TYANA (Asia Minor), also called Thiana, or Thyana, and Thoana, said to have been founded by a Thracian king, became a Roman colony under Caracalla (211—217). Having been incorporated with the kingdom of Palmyra, it was taken by Aurelian in 272. It was captured by the Turks in 709.

TYBURN (London), the site of which is said to be occupied by No. 49, Connaught Square, was the old place of execution for felons, and was used for this purpose as early as the reign of Henry IV. (1399—1413). The first dying speeches, cc., printed in England, were speeches of malefactors executed here in The bodies of Cromwell, Ireton, and Bradshaw were exposed at Tyburn Jan. 30, 1661. The last execution here took place Nov. 7, 1783. Tyburn Road, first mentioned in 1679, and referred to as Tyburn Lane in 1686, is the modern Oxford Street. By 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 23, s. 2 (1699), prosecutors who had secured a capital conviction against a prisoner, obtained what was called a Tyburn Ticket, by which they were exempted from serving any ward or parish offices, in the parish in which the offence had been perpetrated. This statute was repealed by 58 Geo. III. c. 70 (June 3, 1818). (See Executions.)
TYLER'S INSURRECTION.—(See WAT

TYLER'S INSURRECTION.)

TYNDARIS (Sicily), founded by Dionysius the Elder B.C. 395, was one of the first cities that declared for Timoleon, after his landing in the island, B.C. 344. A naval engagement took place off the coast, B.C. 357, between the inhabitants and the Romans, under C. Atilius, without any decided advantage to either side. without any decided advantage to either side. A Cartheginian garrison, which had been forced upon it, was expelled, and an alliance formed with Rome, B.C. 254. It took a conspicuous part in the war between Sextus Pompeius and Octavius Casar, B.C. 36. Although its site is now deserted, it was a considerable place as late as the 4th century. TYNEDALE was annexed to Northumber and by a Hay VI. a.c. (1900). On account of land by 11 Hen. VII. c. 9 (1497), on account of the marauding practices of the inhabitants in company with the Scots. TYNEMOUTH (Northumberland) was destroyed in an inroad of the Danes, under Healfden, in 875. The peninsula was enclosed by a wall and ditch, and the castle was erected under William I. (1066—87). The castle was taken from the Royalists by the Scotch forces in 1644.

TYPE-FOUNDING originated in Germany, metal types having been substituted for the wooden blocks about 1452. William Caslon introduced it into England about 1720.

TYPHUS. - (See CATTLE PLAGUE and

TYRE (Æra of).-This æra commenced Oct.

19, B.C. 125.
TYRE (Phœnicia), called the "rock-built"
Tyre, the Tsor of the Israelites, called by its own populace Sor, or Sur, said to have been founded as early as B.C. 2750, is mentioned in the book of Joshua as one of the boundaries of the tribe of Asher, B.C. 1443 (Josh. xix. 29). Tyre received a large accession of population in consequence of the expulsion of the Sidonians from their own city by the King of Ascalon, B.C. 1210, and some authorities regard this as the origin of Tyre. Hiram, King of Tyre, assisted Solomon in the construction of Tyre, assisted Solomon in the construction of his temple, B.C. 1011 (1 Kings v. 1—12), and the city successfully resisted a five years' siege by Shalmanaser, King of Assyria, B.C. 721—B.C. 717, or, according to Rawlinson, B.C. 725—B.C. 720. Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, laid siege to Tyre B.C. 598, and maintained the attack for 13 years, during which the Tyrians are said to have abandoned their old city, and removed to this island opposite, where they founded insular adoned their old city, and removed to this island opposite, where they founded insular Tyre. The former was called Old and the latter New Tyre. The precise period at which this portion of the city was established is, however, mere matter of conjecture. Cloth was manufactured at Tyre as early as B.C. 588. Alexander III. took Tyre after a seven months' siege of extraordinary difficulty, during which he constructed a mole connecting the insular rety with the mainland, in July, 332 B.O. Antigonus, King of Syria, besieged Tyre B.O. 315, and took it after a siege of 15 months; and it was treacherously surrendered to Antiochus III. (the Great), by Theodotus, lieutenant of Ptolemy (IV.) Philopater, B.O. 218. Tyre was taken from the Saracens by the Crusaders, efter a siege of five months and a helf, June 20. after a siege of five months and a half, June 20.

1123, when a third part of the city was bestowed upon the Venetian republic for its assistance in the capture. Saladin sought in vain to retake it in 1187, and it was seized by Chalil, Sultan of Cairo, in 1291. The prosperity of Tyre was not finally destroyed until the conquest of Syria by the Turks in 1516. The Metalwileh, a sect of Shittes, settled here in 1766, and established a trade in grain and tobacco. Tyre surrendered to the allied fleet in 1841. A bishop of Tyre was ordained by St.

Peter. Councils were held here in 335 and 518. TYRIAN PURPLE.—(See DYEING, PURPLE, TYRNAU (Hungary). — The Austrians defeated the Hungarians here in 1705. The Jesuit university, opened Nov. 13, 1635, was transferred to Pesth in 1777.

TYROL (Austria).—This province of Austria, which was originally peopled by the Rhætians, after many changes passed into the possession of Count Berthold, of Andechs, in 1180, and was ceded to the house of Habsburg in 1363. In 1602 it was conferred upon the Archduke Maximilian, and in 1665 it became an integral part of the Austrian empire. By the peace of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805, the Tyrol was ceded to Bavaria. The population being dissatisfied with their change of rulers, an insurrection broke out in April, 1809, headed by the pa-triotic innkeeper, Andrew Hofer. Under his leadership the Tyrolose expelled the Bavarians, and defeated the French in several engagements, especially in the two battles of Berg and Isel, or Innsprück, May 29 and Aug. 12, 1809. The last-mentioned victory resulted in the expulsion of the French from the Tyrol, and the occupation of Innsprick by Hofer, Aug. 15. Austria resigned all the advantages gained by the insurgents, by the treaty of Schönbrunh, or Vienna, Oct. 14, 1809, by which Bavaria regained her ascendancy. The Tyrolese refused to lay down their arms, from an impression that the treaty was invalid; and the war continued till Dec., when they were subdued. Hofer was made prisoner by the French, Jan. 20, 1810, and was shot at Mantua Feb. 20. The Tyrol was retaken by Austria in 1814, and in 1848 an insurrection of the inhabitants was suppressed by Marshal Radetzky. (See INNSPRÜCK.

TYRONE (Ireland). — This county, in the province of Ulster, at one time called Tyrowen, or Tiroen, was the territory of the Owen, or Throen, was the territory of the Nine Hostages, King of Ireland. It was divided amongst Scotch and English settlers, called "planters," after the flight of the Earl of Tyrone in 1607, and became the theatre of civil war in 1641, and in subsequent years. UKRAINE (Russia), denoting, in Polish, a frontier, the same as the German Mark, and sometimes called Little Russia, was in possession of the Goths in 268. After undergoing various changes, it was ceded to the Cossacks in 1672. Turkey, having asserted some claim to the territory, abandoned it in 1681 in favour of Russia, with which it was incorporated in 1772. Charles XII., on his invasion of Russia, traversed it in order to effect a junction with Mazeppa in 1708. It was crossed by the Emperor Alexander I., when he left Warsaw on his southern journey, April 30, 1818. An insurrection which broke out in the Ukraine

April 25, 1831, was suppressed May 26.

ULEABORG (Russia).—The seaport town of ULSTER (Ireland), one of the provinces, was partly conquered in the Anglo-Norman invasion by John de Courecy, who assumed the title of Earl of Ulster in 1177. Edward, but the of Robert Ruges of Scotland Lunded. brother of Robert Bruce, of Scotland, landed in Ulster with an army in 1315. ULSTER KING OF ARMS was appointed for Ireland Feb. 2, 1553. ULSTER REBELLION. — Roger More, a gentleman of Kildare, Sir Phelim O'Neil, Lord Enniskillen, and other native Irish chieftains, formed a conspiracy for the purpose of surprising Dublin castle, and causing a general rising in Ulster, both of which were to be effected Oct. 23, 1641. Though the former miscarried, the rising in Ulster took place. The country was devastated, the towns were captured, and many of the new settlers put to death. The revolt, in the course of which many thousands of lives were sacrificed, was not quelled until 1649. ULSTER SETTLEMENT.—James I. formed a scheme for the colonization of Ulster, in a science for the colonization of Ulster, in foil. The lands were divided into lots of 1,000, 1,500, and 2,000 acres, and only English settlers were admitted. The order of baronets (q, v) was established in the same year, to provide a fund for the defence of the new English settlement of Ulster. The first patent to Nicholas Bacon bears date May 22, 1611.

UMBRELLAS, used by the ancient Greeks, and considered an evidence of rank, and also by the Romans. Michael Drayton, in one of his poems, written in 1630, mentions them as fashionable in England. Dr. Jamieson, who purchased one at Paris, is said to have first introduced it into notice in Glasgow in 1780. The first carried in the streets of Bristol was in 1782. Jonas Hanway, the eastern traveller, did much to render the umbrella fashionable, as he carried one in the streets of London about 1750, though it was considered a mark of effeminacy.

UNDERGROUND RAILWAY.—The name given to the Metropolitan Railway (q. v.), a considerable portion of which passes under the streets of London.

UNDERTAKERS .- Certain members of Parliament who professed to understand the temper of the House of Commons, and to facilitate the King's dealings with it, received this name in the reign of James I., about 1610. In opening Parliament, James I. refers to them as "astrange kind of beast called undertaker." Sir Henry Neville was their leader.

UNDERTAKERS, or UPHOLDERS, were incorporated in 1627.

UNHAPPY ISLANDS .- (See DESVENTURA-

UNICORN. - Ctesias, the Greek historian, describes it as a native of India, B.C. 398. Aristotle speaks of it under the appellation of the Indian ass, B.C. 334. Various accounts of this fabled animal have since been written. When James I. succeeded to the throne of England in 1603, he adopted the figure of a unicorn to support with the lion the royal arms, the supporters of the Scottish arms being two unicorns.

UNIFORMITY .- (See ACT OF UNIFORMITY.) UNIFORMS.—Harold II. clothed his soldiers in leather in 1066. Louis XIV. of France gave a uniform to his troops about 1662. In the English navy, uniforms are said to have originated with Admiral Mostyn before 1757.

UNIGENITUS .- The bull condemning the doctrines of the Jansenists, so called because it commences with this word, was issued by Pope Clement XI., at the instance of Louis XIV., Sep. 8, 1713. It was confirmed by Pope Benedict XIII. in 1725, was made national law in 1730, and was accepted by the University of Paris in 1739. Beaumont, Archbishop of Paris, in 1752, ordained that no dying person should be allowed to receive the eucharist unless it could be shown that he adhered to the principles of this bull. Louis XV. issued a declaration Dec. 13, 1756, that though it was to be respected it was not to be regarded as a rule of faith. (See Acceptants.) UNION.—(See BRUSSELS, the Union of; CALMAR; EVANGELICAL Union; FRANKFORTON-THE-MAINE; HELLBRONN; HENOTICON; REPEAL OF THE UNION; UTRECHT, &c.)

UNION.-Commissioners were appointed (1 James I. c. 2) to treat with Scotland for the union of the two countries, in 1604. Queen Anne, who in her first speech to Parliament recommended it, March 11, 1702, was empowered to appoint commissioners to effect the object by I Anne, c. 8. They came to terms July 22, 1706, and 25 articles were drawn up and agreed to. The Scottish Parliament passed the act Jan. 16, 1707, and in the English Parliament a bill (6 Anne, c. 11), embodying the treaty, was passed, and received the royal assent March 6, 1707. It took effect May 1. The united kingdoms were named Great Britain. (See Union of GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.)

UNION CHARGEABILITY ACT, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79 (June 29, 1865), provides for the better distribution of the charge for the Relief of the Poor in Unions. It came into operation

March 25, 1866. UNION CLUB (London) was founded in 1822. The House was erected in 1824.

UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRE-LAND was alluded to by George III. in his speech at the opening of Parliament, Jan. 22, 1800. A bill (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 47), embodying articles of union, was introduced by Mr. The statute (40 Geo. III. c. 38) passed the Irish Parliament June 13, 1800, and the union took effect from Jan. r., 1801. It is called the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

UNIONISTS.—(See REPUBLICANS.)
UNION JACK, a national flag for Great Britain, composed of the cross of St. George and the saltire of St. Andrew, was announced by royal proclamation, April 12, 1606. Having fallen into disuse, it was revived by another proclamation, July 28, 1707. The saltire of St. Patrick was added Jan. 1, 1801.

lished at Gravesend by a limited liability company in 1863.

UNITARIANS received the name of Socinians (q. v.) from Lælius Socinus, who founded a sect in Italy in 1546, and were established as distinct bodies at Pinkzow, Rakow, and in several parts of Transylvania, in 1565. They condemned their own bishop, Davidis, as a heretic, and cast him into prison in 1578. Faustus Socinus settled their disputes, and those in Poland in 1592. An edict, compelling them to quit Poland within three years, was issued in 1658. Theophilus Lindsey left the Church of England and advocated their tenets in 1774. In the Presbyterian churches their doctrines spread considerably about 1795. Numerous societies were formed in England and the United States for the propagation of their doctrines in 1808. An act (53 Geo. III. c. 160) was passed for their relief July 21, 1813. The first National Convention of the Unitarians of the United States was held in New York, April 5, 1865. (See Almohades.) UNITED BRETHREN.—A number of the Moravian Brethren (q. v.), persecuted by the Roman Catholic clergy, took refuge in Saxony, where they received a grant of waste land from Count Zinzendorf, and built the village of Herrnhut, "the watch of the Lord," in 1722. The count entered the clerical profession, and was ordained bishop of the church at Lissa in 1737. Some of its members came to England in 1738; and Archbishop Potter, interesting himself in their behalf, induced the legislature to pass two acts (20 Geo. II. c. 44, 1747; and 22 Geo. II. c. 30, 1748) to relieve them from taking oaths, and from certain political disabilities. In these measures they were acknowledged to be "an ancient Protestant episcopal church, which had been countenanced and relieved by the kings of England, his majesty's predecessors."

UNITED GREEK CHURCH consists of Christians in Austria, Italy, Poland, and Russia, who have not separated from the Church of Rome, though they are in communion with the Greek Church and observe its ceremonies and discipline.

UNITED IRISHMEN conceived a project for establishing an independent republic, and were formed into a society by a barrister named Theobald Wolfe Tone, in 1791. An invasion of Ireland by the French was arranged under their auspices in Dcc., 1796. Tone, who was tried and convicted Nov. 10, 1798, committed suicide in prison. An claborate report of their proceedings was prepared by a secret committee of the House of Commons, and printed March 15, 1799.

UNITED PROVINCES (Europe). — The deputies of the five provinces of Guelderland, Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, and the Frisian provinces, assembled at Utrecht, Jan. 23, 1579, and signed the celebrated treaty or union of Utrecht, which formed the basis of the Dutch republic. They renounced their allegiance to Philip II. of Spain, July 26, 1581. Overyssel having joined it in 1580, and Groningen in 1794, it formed the republic of the Seven United Provinces. In addition to these provinces, some cities were admitted, of which the chief was Ghent, Feb. 4, 1579; Antwerp, July 25, 1579; and Bruges, Feb. 6, 1580. It was generally called Holland (q. v.).
UNITED SERVICE CLUB (London) was

UNIVERSALISTS, or RESTORATIONISTS,

who held the doctrine of the ultimate salvation of all mankind, existed at an early age in the Christian Church. The doctrines prevailed extensively in the 3rd and 4th centuries, and were condemned at the Fifth General Council, at Constantinople, May 4—June 2, 553. They are divided into Universalists, Cameronites or Hypothetical Universalists, and Semi-Universalists. Several societies were formed in the United States in 1780. The United States Universalist Convention met at Middletown Sep. 19, 1865. At their General Convention, held at Concord, Tuesday, Sep. 20, 1864, resolutions in support of the war against the Southern States were adopted unanimously. UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.—This system of voting existed in the republics of ancient Greece and in Rome, and afforded great facilities for corruption. It was established in France in 1791, and was abolished on the fall of the empire. It formed one of the provisions of Daniel O'Connell's Reform Bill, which was rejected by the House of Commons May 28, 1830, and it was adopted by the Chartists as the first point in their charter in 1838. It was again established in France March 5, 1848, and again established in France state. 5, 1979, was modified May 31, 1850. It was adopted by the President, Louis Napoleon, Dec. 2, 1851, and again for the election of deputies by the reach constitution. Jan. 15, 1852. The new French constitution, Jan. 15, 1852. The voting of the Italian states for and against annexation to Sardinia in 1860 was also by universal suffrage.

UNIVERSITIES .- The ancient Romans applied the term university to any corporation of traders or professional men, and in eccle-siastical language it was used to denote a siastical language it was used to denote a number of churches under the government of one archdeacon. An instance of this employ-ment of the word occurs in 688. Academically it signifies "a universal school, in which are taught all branches of learning, or the four faculties of theology, law, medicine, and the arts, and in which degrees are conferred in these faculties." The universities of Cambridge, Dublin, and Oxford each return two members to the House of Commons. By 24 &

in 1826 as the University of London, became, before 1831, the London University (q. v.), and was incorporated as University College Nov. 28.

1836. UNIVERSITY COLLEGE (Oxford), said to have been founded by Alfred in 872, was endowed by William of Durham, rector of Bishopwearmouth, in 1253. The first statutes are dated 1280. The hall was commenced in 1640, dated 1280. The hall was commenced in 1640, the chapel was completed in 1665, and the library in 1660

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE HOSPITAL (London) was founded in 1833. UNIVERSITY DEGREES.—The term master is believed to be the oldest. Eugenius II., by the 34th canon of a council held at Rome Nov. 15, 826, speaks of the appointment of masters and doctors. This was confirmed by a decree of Leo IV. in another council at Rome, Dec. 8, 853. Gregory IX. (1227-41) is said to have instituted the inferior rank of bachelors. The degrees both of bachclor and of master of arts were conferred at Oxford in the time of Henry III. (1216—1272). The degrees for laws are said to have been introduced into the university in 1149. The number of arts in the versity in 1449. The middle Ages, was seven; of which three—grammar, logic, rhetoric—constituted the Trivium; and the remaining four -arithmetic, astronomy, geometry, and music the Quadrivium.

UNIVERSITY LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

-The convocation of Oxford University passed a statute authorizing Middle-Class Examinations, June 18, 1857, and the first commenced at Oxford June 21, 1858. A similar system, with the omission of the title of Associate in Arts, conferred by Oxford on successful candidates, was adopted by the University of Cambridge Nov. 24, 1857, and the first examination was held there in Dec., 1858. It was resolved to apply the system to girls March 9, 1865. UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—London

University (q.v.), on its foundation in 1826, was known by this name. The University of London, a government institution or board of examiners for conferring degrees on graduates of University College (q.v.), &c., was incorporated by letters patent of William IV., Nov. 28, 1836; and confirmed by a charter of Queen Victoria, Dec. 5, 1837. Originally established at Somerset House, it was removed to Burlington House, where new buildings, according to designs approved by government in Aug., 1866, were commenced.

UNKIAR-SKELESSI (Treaty), between Russia and Turkey, was signed at Constantinople July 8, 1833. By a secret article the straits of the Dardanelles were closed against all foreign ships of war. It was modified in Jan., 1834. A motion for its production in the House of Commons by Lord Dudley Stuart, who characterized it as inimical to English interests, was agreed to Feb. 19, 1836. UNKNOWN TONGUE.—(See IRVINGITES.) UNLEARNED PARLIAMENT.—The parliament held by Henry IV. at Coventry, Oct. 6, 1404, was called the Illiterate, Lack-learning, or Unlearned Parliament, or the Parliament of Dunces, because lawyers were excluded from it. Some authorities call it the "Laymen's Parliament," and say it was thus named by the clergy on account of certain designs against URBICUS (Battles).-On the banks of this Spanish river, the modern Orbega, Theodoric, King of the Visigoths, defeated and almost annihilated the Suevi, under their King Rechiarius, in 456.—The Moorish prince Almondhir was defeated near its banks by Alphonso III., King of Leon, in 874, but with such loss to himself that, according to the Arab chroniclers, the Christians were employed during more than 11 days in burying their dead.

URBINO (Italy), the ancient Urbinum Hortense, a municipal town where Fabius Valens, the general of Vitellius, was put to death in 69, was besteged and taken by Belisarius in 538, and became the capital of a duchy about Cæsar Borgia treacherously obtained possession by requesting the duke, as a friend, to lend him his artillery, with which he entered the town as a conqueror in 1502. It was wrested from him by Pope Julius II. in 1503. Leo X. captured it in 1516. The efforts of the duke to recover it in 1517 proved ineffectual, and Leo X. annexed it to the States of the Church in 1519. It was recovered by the duke in 1522, and was incorporated with the Papal States in 1632.

-(See EDESSA.) URFAH.-

URGEL (Spain) was created a bishopric in 820. A council was held here in 799. The town was captured by the Moorish king Abderahman in 822, by the French in 1691, and again when the Duke of Berwick commanded, Oct. 12, 1719. After a few days' siege, the Royalists took it by assault, putting the greater part of the garrison to the sword, June 21, 1822. A regency, which professed to administer the government in the name of Ferdinand VII., was formed here Sep. 14, 1822. On the approach of Mina, the regency fled from the town, Nov. (See ANDORRA.)

URGENGE.—(See KHIVA.) UR, or HUR (Chaldæa), the first capital of Chaldæa, founded B.C. 2234, is by some supposed to be Edessa, the modern Orfah or Urfah. and by others Mugheir, a city lower down the Euphrates. The family of Terah left Ur (Gen. xi. 31), for the land of Canaan. URI (Switzerland).—This canton was one of the three which revolted against Austria, in 1307, and which contracted the federal compact of Brunnen, Dec. 8, 1315. In 1775 the Val Levantina revolted against the jurisdiction of Uri, but was compelled to return to its allegiance.

URICONIUM, or WROXETER (Shropshire). —About 1700, a person digging in a field at Wroxeter, near Shrewsbury, discovered a Roman tessellated pavement and other interesting remains. Further discoveries were afterwards made, but no systematic plan of exploration was adopted until a committee of exploration was arounded at Shrewsbury Newscowting was surprised at Shrewsbury Newscowting and Shrewsbury Newscowting excavation was appointed at Shrewsbury, Nov. 11, 1858. Excavations were commenced Feb. URANIUM was obtained from the mineral 3, 1859; and the result was the discovery of the ruins of the Roman city of Uriconium, which has been called, in consequence, the British Pompeii.

URIM AND THUMMIM, commanded by Jehovah to form part of the breastplate of judgment worn by the Jewish high priest on recreain occasions, B.c. 1491 (Exod. xxviii. 30). It was consulted before entering upon any important enterprise, as by David when he inquired if he should go up against any of the cities of Judah (2 Sam. ii. 1), B.c. 1053. According to Josephus, it ceased to return responses about B.C. 110. URSULINE NUNS, founded for aiding the poor, and instructing females, by Angela di Brescia, about 1537. The order took its name from the English saint Ursula (flourished about 453), when the institution was confirmed by Pope Paul III. in 1544. Madame de Sainte Beuve established the first house of the order at Paris in 1604.

URSUS (Order) .- (See BEAR.) URUGUAY, or BANDA ORIENTAL DEL URUGUAY (S. America), formed part of the vice-royalty of Buenos Ayres, under the Spaniards, and was occupied by Brazil in 1815. A war between the two countries ensued in 1825. A settlement was effected, by which a portion of Uruguay was erected into an independent republic in 1828; and a constitution was published in Aug., 1830. Ships of war were sent by England and France into the Rio de la Plata, in consequence of the lawless state of the country, under Rosas, in 1845; and Monte Video was blockaded by the English till 1848; and by the French till 1849. Arrangements were made, and treaties formed with France and England at the conclusion of the blockade; but after the withdrawal of those powers the war was renewed with Brazil (q. v.), and prosecuted till 1851. Gen. Flores, an ex-President, who raised the standard of insurrection April 19, 1860, was defeated at Las Piedras, Aug. 16, 1862. War having broken out between Uruguay and Brazil, in Oct., 1864, Gen. Flores, in conjunction with a Brazilian army, entered Monte Video Feb. 22, 1865, and acted as provisional President, restoring the former treaties with Brazil. A treaty of alliance between the Argentine Confederation, Brazil, and Uruguay, against Paraguay, was concluded at Buenos Ayres, May 4, 1865. The Allies, under Gen. Flores, defeated the Paraguayans Aug. 17, 1865, and occupied Corrientes Oct 26. Dr. F. A. Vidal was elected President March 1, 1866. (See MONTE VIDEO.)

USIPETES, or USIPI .- This German tribe. occupying territory to the north of the Lippe, having crossed the lower Rhine, were treacherously attacked and defeated by Julius Casar, B.C. 55. Drusus attacked them B.C. 12. They opposed the progress of Germanicus on his opposed the progress of Germanicus on his return from the country of the Marsi, in 14; and took part in the siege of Moguntiacum, about 70. A detachment of the nation served in the Roman army in Britain in 83; after which their name disappears from history.

USURY .- The Jows were prohibited by tho Mosaie law from exacting usury from those of their own nation, B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxiii. 20). In Greece it was not regulated by law, and ranged from 10 to 18 per cent. With the Romans the legal rate was 12 per cent., senators being allowed to recover one half of that tors being anower to recover one than of the rate by the Theodosian code, in 438. (See Interest.) By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37 (July 29, 1839), all bills of exchange and promissory notes not having more than 12 months to run, and all from the operation of the usury laws. In France the rate was fixed at five per cent. in 1665; but the laws affecting usury were abolished at the revolution of 1789.

UTAH (N. America) was acquired by the United States Government from Mexico, in 1848, and constituted a territory, with Brigham Young as governor, Sep. 9, 1850. Previous to the formal transfer in 1847, the Mormonites (q.v.) had established themselves hore. A force was despatched against them by the Federal Government in 1857. Brigham Young submitted to authority, and received them peaceably in June, 1858. (See Colorado, Salt Lake City, &c.)

UTICA (Africa) was founded by the Tyrians about B.C. 1765, and is mentioned as an ally of Carthage B.C. 348. Scipio besieged it B.C. 204. At the close of the third Punic war it concluded terms with the Roman conquerors, B.C. 146. Curio was defeated and slain near this city by Varus and Juba, B.C. 49. Cato the younger, and many of the partisans of Pompey who escaped from Pharsalia, assembled here B.C. 47. Cato formed his little Scnate, and opposed Julius Cæsar. After the battle of Thapsus (q. v.) he committed suicide, April 9, B.C. 46. It was presented by Augustus with the Roman civitas, B.C. 31. It appears with the Roman civitas, B.C. 31. It appears to have fallen into the hands of the Vandals about 439; and, after undergoing various vicissitudes, was destroyed by the Saracens about 700.

UTRECHT (Holland), the Trajectum of the Romans, capital of the province of that name, is mentioned in the Itinerary of Antoninus, in 138. An independent bishopric was founded in 136. And it was made an archbishopric in 1559. The cathedral of St. Martin, built in 1382, was much injured by a storm in 1674. The university was founded in 1634. It entered into the Dutch confederation in 1579, and was taken in 1672 by Louis XIV., who was compelled to abandon it in 1672. A provisional synod was held here in 1763. The French, under Gen. Salm, occupied

Utrecht Jan. 17, 1795. UTRECHT (Treaty), which closed the war of the Spanish succession that broke out in 1701, was signed at Utrecht, between France, Great Britain, Prussia, Portugal, Savoy, and the States-General, April 11, 1713 (N.S.). Pre-liminaries between France and England had been signed at Whitehall as early as Oct. 8 (N.S.), 1711. The Congress at Utrecht opened Jan. 29, 1712. Spain acceded to the treaty Gibraltar, Minorca, Nova July 13, 1713. Gibraltar, Minorca, Nova Scotia, and St. Christopher were ceded to England; Hudson's Bay was restored; and the French settlements in Newfoundland were abandoned. It was proclaimed in Lon-don May 15. The Emperor Charles VI., who refused to make peace, was given till June 1 to accede to the treaty. His forces were defeated, and conferences were opened Nov. 26, which resulted in the peace of Rastadt, confirmed at Baden (q. v.). The treaty between Spain and Savoy was signed Aug. 13, 1713; between Spain and the States-General June 26, 1714; and between Spain and Portugal in 20, 1714, and better the problem of the Union of Peb. 6, 1715.

UTRECHT (Union of).—The Union of Brussels (q. v.) had been dissolved in 1578, but the Prince of Orange formed another alliance amongst the Protestant provinces in alliance amongst the Protestant provinces in the Protes 1579. It was a perpetual union, signed Jan. 23, and received its name from having been proclaimed at Utrecht, Jan. 29, 1579. (See United Provinces.)

UTTOXETER (Battle). — The Duke of Hamilton having entered Lancashire with a body of Scotch troops, in support of the cause of Charles I., was defeated near Preston by Cromwell, who pursued him to this town in Staffordshire, where he was captured, Aug. 20, 1648. UXAMA.—(See OSMA.)

UXBRIDGE (Middlesex).—Commissioners met here to discuss terms of peace between Charles I. and the Parliament, Jan. 30, 1645. The Parliamentary party demanded the abolition of episcopacy and the liturgy, and that the absolute control of the army and navy should be vested in them. These conditions were rejected on behalf of Charles I., and the negotiations terminated without result, Feb. 22.

UXELLODUNUM (France).—This town of the Cadarci was the scene of Julius Cæsar's last great military exploit in Gaul. It was besieged by him, and only surrendered after a desperate resistance, from want of water, B.C. 51. The conqueror sullied his victory by causing the hands of all the fighting men left alive to be cut off.

UZ, supposed to have been in the south of Arabia Deserta, is mentioned as the land where the patriarch Job lived (Job i. 1), B.C.

UZES (France).—This town, near Nismes, was taken by Clovis I. in 507. It became a stronghold of the Huguenots, who retained it till 1629, when it was occupied by the Roman Catholic party, and its fortifications were destroved.

VACCINATION. - Dr. Edward Jenner's attention was first directed to this subject in 1768, and he tried it on a boy named Phipps with matter procured from the hand of a dairy-maid who had contracted cow-pox, May 14, 1796. The boy was inoculated with small-pox matter by way of experiment, July 1, 1796, and no disease followed. The practice of vaccination was extended by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 29 (July 23, 1840); amended by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 24 (June 21, 1841), which provided for its extension to the poor free of charge; and it was made compulsory by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100 (Aug. 29, 1853). It was made compulsory in Ireland by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 52 (July 13, 1863), and in Scotland by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 186 (July 28, 1863). Jenner's services were acknowledged by a grant of £10,000, voted by the House of Commons, June 3, 1802, and by another of £20,000 in 1807. The Jennerian Institution was founded in 1806, and the National Vaccine in 1809. (See INOCULATION, SMALL-POX, &c.)

VACCOLI (Battle), between the Pisans and the Luccans, in which the latter were defeated, was fought in 1055.
__VADIMONIAN_LAKE (Battles). — The

Etruscans were defeated, and their power was first broken, near this lake, in Italy, in an engagement with the Romans, under Q. Fabius Maximus Rullianus, B.C. 310.—In a second battle fought near the same spot the Etruscans, in alliance with the Boil and other Gauls, were defeated by the consul P. Cornelius

Dolabella, B.C. 283. VÆSTERAS.—(See WESTERAS.)

VAGRANTS, or VAGABONDS.-This class of wanderers is referred to in the "Statute of Labourers" (23 Edw. III. c. 1), passed in 1350. Numerous penal enactments were made to prevent the increase of vagrancy. By 1 & 2 Edw. VI. c. 3 (1547), any person who had offered them work which they refused, was authorized to brand them on the breast with a V, hold them in slavery for two years, feed them during that period on bread and water, and hire them out to others. Inoperative from its severity, this act was repealed in 1549. The privy council having issued circular letters to the sheriffs of counties to apprehend all "vagabonds and sturdy beggars, commonly called Egyptians," 13,000 were taken up in 1569. All previous laws on the subject were remodelled by 17 Geo. II. c. 5 (1743), which took effect from June 1, 1744, distributing them into the three classes of—idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues. In the category of rogues and vagabonds this act included, "all common players of Interlude, and all persons who shall for gain perform or cause to be performed any Interlude, Tragedy, cause to be performed any interinde, Tragedy, Comedy, Opera, Play, Farce, or other entertainment of the stage not authorized by Law." The law is regulated by 5 Geo. IV. c. 83 (June 21, 1824), amended by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38 (July 27, 1838). (See FORTUNE-TELLERS, HAWKERS AND PEDLARS, &c.)

VAL.—(See LAFFELDT.)
VALAIS (Switzerland), having been conquered by the Romans, was seized by the Burgundians on the decline of the empire. They were supplanted by the Franks, who engaged in a civil war; and the lower district was subjected by the upper in 1475. It was allied with the Cantons in 1495, and became an associated state in 1529. The two districts were formed into one canton in 1798. Napoleon Buonaparte made it a separate republic in 1802, and united it to the French empire Nov. 12, 1810. It became part of the new confederation, under the constitution framed by the congress of Vienna, May 27, 1815. Several political changes of a democratic character took place in 1830. VALDENSES, or WALDENSES, also called Vallenses, Valdesii, and Vaudois, Christians dwelling in the Cottian Alps, who, according to the best authorities, retained their faith unsullied during prevailing corruption, and formed the connecting link between the primitive church of the apostolic age and the reformed church of modern times. They occupicd the valleys of Lucerna, Perosa, and San Martino, in Piedmont; and their ancestors are said to have possessed an ecclesiastical system of their own as early as 820. Bishop Claude, of Turin, who advocated these principles in the 9th century, protested against image worship and other Romish practices; and the "Chronique de St. Tron," written early in the 12th century, notices the peculiar views held by these mountaineers. A confession of their faith, bearing date 1120, is extant; and the "Nobla Leyçzon," an exposition of their principles, was written in 1100. Peter Valdo, or Waldo, in 1170 formed a society called the Poor Mcn of Lyons, and he is often mentioned as the founder of the Valdenses, though they existed some time before. The Archbishop of Lyons prohibited the followers of Valdo from preaching in 1178, and Valdo, who took refuge in Bohemia, died in 1197. The Valdenses were denounced at the Council of Verona, Aug. 1—Nov. 4, 1184, and having been excommunicated, many of them went into France, Italy, and Germany. They were ordered by Alphonso II. of Aragon to depart out of his dominions in 1194, and their first persecution commenced in 1194, and their first persecution commenced in 1194. persecution commenced in 1207. (See Albi-GENSES.) A colony professing their tenets settled in Calabria, and founded several towns in the 14th century. Innocent VIII. ordered a crusade against them in 1487. A great synod, composed of persons holding these views, was held at Angrogna, in Piedmont, in 1532. They were massacred by order of Francis I. in 1545 and in 1546. Instigated by the Pope and the court of Spain, Duke Emanuel Philibert sent troops into their quiet valleys in Sep., 1560. Neither women nor children were spared, and many, taken prisoners, were consigned to the flames. Their resistance was, however, so successful that the Duke of Savoy made peace with them and granted them toleration in June, 1561. Charles Emanuel I. guaranteed them the exercise of their religion, under certain restrictions, in 1603 and in 1620; and Charles I. of England sent two embassies to intercede for them in 1627 and in 1629. Another crusade was commenced against them by Charles Emanuel II. in 1655. His cruelties elicited protests from several European states. Cromwell induced Louis XIV. to mediate, and an amnesty was granted in Aug., 1656. Fresh persecutions followed in 1663 and in 1664. By the advice of Louis XIV. of France, Victor Amadeus II. issued an edict commanding them to abjure their tenets, in Jan., 1686. Numbers were put to the sword, and their property was confiscated; others were thrown into prison, where they died; and many families migrated into Switzerland. Eight hundred of these exiles, under their pastor, Henri Arnaud, undertook a romantic expedition to their native valleys, where they arrived Sep. 16, 1638. In return for their bravery in defending the passes of the Alps against the French, Victor Amadeus III. of Sardinia, in June, 1794, published an ordinance redressing many of their grievances. They were placed by Napoleon Buonaparte upon an equal footing with Roman Catholics in 1802; but again subjected to disabilities by their king in 1814. Charles Felix, however, showed them some degree of indulgence in 1821. Permission was granted them by Victor Emanuel II. to erect a church at Turin, Dec. 15, 1853. In 1865, Dr. Todd published "The Books of the Vaudois; the Waldensian Manuscripts preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin," long supposed to have been lost.

VALDIVIA (Chili), capital of a province of the same name, founded by Peter de Valdivia in 1551, has been several times besieged. Lord Cochrane took it in 1820, and it was almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1837.

VALEGGIO (Battles).—Eugène de Beauharnais defeated the Austrians, under Bellegarde, at this town on the Mincio, Feb. 8, 1814. Charles Albert was defeated by the Austrians rear the same place in July, 1848,

VALENCAY (France).—Napoleon I. imprisoned Ferdinand VII. of Spain in the palace at this town, built in the 16th century, May 9, 1808. An attempt to liberate him was made by the English Government, but without success, in 1810. A treaty for the same object was concluded between Napoleon I. and the royal captive Dec. 11, 1813. Though the Cortes refused to ratify the treaty, Ferdinand VII. was set free, and arrived in Spain March 19, 1814. Don Carlos (See Carlists) resided here from 1840 to 1845.

VALENCE (France) .- Pius VI., conveyed to this town a prisoner by the French, Aug. 19, died here Aug. 29, 1799. Councils were held here, July 12, 374; May 23, 585; Jan. 8, 855; in 890; Sep. 30, 1100; in June, 1209; and Dec.

5, 1248. VALENCIA (Spain), capital of the province of the same name, became a Roman colony about B.C. 138. It was taken and destroyed by Pompeius about B.C. 77. Adolphus, King of the Goths, assailed it in 414. Councils were held here in July or Aug., 530, and Dec. 4, 546. The Saracens, who obtained possession of the province by treaty with Theodemir of Murcia in 713, erected it into a kingdom in 1009. Fcrdinand I. defeated the Moors here in 1064. It was taken by the King of Toledo, who deposed its sovereign in 1065. Prince Alcadir perished, with his Christian allies, in defending it against the Almoravides, in 1992. It was delivered from the Moors by the Cid in 1994, on which account it is sometimes called Valencia del Cid. The Moors regained possession in 1099. Incursions were made into the province by the Christians in 1224. The city was assailed in 1236 by Gaycum, or Gaymis, of Aragon, who captured it and annexed it to his kingdom, Sep. 29, 1238. The province was incorporated with Aragon by Alphonso III. (1285—91). The Earl of Peterborough seized it in 1705; and it was recovered for Philip V. by the Duke of Berwick in 1707. The cathedral, erected on the site of a Roman temple and a Moorish mosque in 1262, received additions in 1482. The wall surrounding the city was built by Peter IV. in 1356; the university was founded in 1410; and the Lonja de Seda, or hall of silk, was built in 1482. The French, who failed in an attack upon it in 1808, succeeded in capturing it Jan. 9, 1812. They abandoned their conquest in June, 1813. A decree issued by Ferdinand VII. from this place annulled the acts of the Cortes, restoring absolute government in Spain, May 4, 1814. An insurrection, caused by the imposition of a coal-tax, broke out Jan. 17, 1817. Another, with the object of assassinating the governor-general, Elio, suppressed under circumstances of great cruelty, broke out Jan. 21, 1819. The civil war was carried on with great fierceness in the province in 1836. HOLY BROTHERHOOD.)

VALENCIA (Venezuela), founded in 1555, was burned in 1814. VALENCIENNES (France).—The town was gradually formed around a castle erected by the early kings of the Franks. It fell to Lothaire in 842, and was taken by Baldwin IV., Count of Flanders, in 1006. It suffered from the plague in 1008; was besieged by Margaret of Hainault in 1254; by Louis XI. in 1477; by Turenne in 1656; and was taken by Louis XIV. in 1677. It was confirmed to France by the treaty of Nimeguen in 1678. The allied troops, under the Duke of York and the Prince of under the Duke of York and the Prince of Coburg, captured it, after an heroic defence extending over 43 days, July 28, 1793. (See Famars, Battle.) It capitulated to the French Aug. 27, 1794. The belfry of the town-hall fell in 1843. A statue to Froissart, born hero in 1333, was erected in 1856. Since 1825 an annual festival, called the Incas, consisting of a masquerade, in which the costumes of the ancient Peruvians prevail, has been celebrated

VALENTIA (Britannia).—Theodosius, father of the Emperor Theodosius I. (378-95), after defeating the Picts and Scots, recovered the country between the walls of Agricola and of Severus, and in 368 formed it into a province, which he named Valentia, in honour of tho

VALENTINE'S DAY, Feb. 14, "a Christian commutation," says Fosbroke, "of the ceremony in the Lupercalia (in honour of Juno Februata), in which the names of young women were put into a box, from which they were drawn by the men as chance directed. It was continued by ladies, who chose knights for a twelvementh, mostly during carnival time." The earliest known poetical valentines time. The earliest known pocucar vactionies were written by Charles, Duke of Orleans, taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, Oct. 25, 1415. They are in the library of the British Museum. John Lydgate (1375—1460), in a poem in praise of Queen Catherine, written in 1440, alludes to the custom. The saint who gives name to the day was martyred at Rome about 270.

VALLADOLID (Spain), the Pintia of the Romans, the Belad Walid of the Moors, and capital of the province of the same name, was chosen as a royal residence by Juan II. of Aragon in the 15th century, and Charles V. transferred the court here from Seville in 1532. A council was held here Aug. 2, 1322. The university was founded in 1346; the cathedral, commenced in 1585, is unfinished. One of its towers fell to the ground in 1841. Columbus died at Valladolid, May 20, 1506. Philip II., who was born here, induced Pope Clement VIII. to raise it to a bishopric in 1595. A French army under Dupont occupied it in Jan., 1808. Benedict, by John Gualbert (999-1073), in 1038, and was approved by Pope Alexander II. in 1070. New buildings were erected in 1673. The order of monks of Vallambrosa was united with the Sylvestrians (founded in 1231) in 1662, when a black dress was adopted.

VALLS (Battles).-The French, commanded by St. Cyr, gained a complete victory over the Spanish troops at this town, in Catalonia, Nov. 18, 1809.—Maedonald was defeated here by Sarsfield in 1811.

VALMY (Battle).-The Prussians were defeated by the French, under Kellermann, at this town in France, Sep. 20, 1792. For this success Napoleon I. conferred on this general the title of Duke of Valmy, in 1808.

VALOIS (France).—The county, bestowed by Philip III. of France on his second son Charles, in 1285, fell to Louis, Duke of Orleans, second son of Charles V. of France, in 1392. On the accession to the throne of the Duke of Orleans, under the title of Louis XII, in 1498, it was reunited to the royal domains. The title of Duko de Valois was borne by the Orleans family till 1790. The House of Valois reigned in France from 1328 till 1589.

VALPARAISO (S. America). — This town, the name of which significs Valley of Paradise, the name of which signifies valley of Talastes, the principal port of Chili, suffered severely from earthquakes in 1822, 1829, and April 2, 1831. It was devastated by fire in 1843, and April 4, 1862, and was bombarded by the Spanish fleet, March 31, 1866.

VALROMEY (France), the ancient Vallis

Romana, belonged for many years to the counts of Savoy, and was ceded to France in 1601. It was made a duchy by Louis XIII. (1610-43) VALTELINE (Italy).—This small district, on the Italian side of the Rhætian Alps, taken by the Grisons in 1512, and ceded to them in 1530, was the seeme of the cruel massacre of the Protestants by the Roman Catholic rebels, July 19, 1620. The French resisted the attempts of the Spaniards to establish their authority here, and after a long struggle the territory was restored to the Grisons in 1639. (See Mongon.) Napoleon Buonaparte annexed the Valteline to the Cisalpine republic Oct. 10, 1797, and erected it into the department of the Adda, in the French kingdom of Italy, in 1807. It was ceded to Austria in 1814, and to Italy

VALVASSOR, VAVASSOR, or VAVASSOUR. -Persons holding fiefs not immediately under the king, but under some intermediate lord, and having subordinate freeholders under them, existed in England, Scotland, France, Lombardy, and Aragon, and are twice men-tioned in Domesday Book, 1056. VANCOUVER ISLAND, or QUADRA (N. America), was supposed to form part of the mainland till 1789. Capt. Vancouver visited it and gave it the name of Quadra and Vancouver Island, the former in honour of the Spanish commandant at Nootka Sound, in 1792. It was made over to the Hudson Bay Company, on condition that they should colonize it, in Aug., 1848. Gold was discovered here in 1856. It was united with British Columbia by 20 &

Vancouver, ordered by the British Government to proceed to Nootka Sound to receive a formal cession of the territory from Spain, set sail in the Discovery, April 4, 1791, accompanied by Capt. Broughton in the Chatham, a small capt. Broagnon in the charach, a small vessel of 135 tons burthen. He arrived on the coast of New Albion in April, 1792. On the outward voyage he surveyed the southern coast of New Holland, and part of New Zealand, while Broughton discovered Chatham Islands. Broughton having been despatched home with intelligence of the evasive conduct of the Spaniards, Vancouver proceeded, in Jan., 1793, to winter in the Sandwich Islands. In the spring he resumed the survey of the American coast, and returned to the Sandwich Islands, where he obtained from the chiefs a formal cession of Owhyhee to Great Britain, Feb. 25, 1794. The survey of the north-west coast of America was completed Aug. 22, 1794; and he entered the Shannon on his return, Sep. 13, 1795, having lost only two men out of both crews. The narrative of his labours, written by himself, was in course of prepara-tion for the press when he died, May 10,

VANDALS, a Slavonic or a Teutonie tribe, inhabited the banks of the Oder, and the scacoast of Pomerania and Mecklenburg, about 250. A considerable number were transported into Britain by Probus in 279. With the Sarmatians in Hungary they formed a union in 331, and joined the forces of Radagaisus for the invasion of Italy in 405. Having separated from their allies, they were attacked by the Franks, 20,000 with their king falling on the field of battle. The Alani came to their aid, and they marched without opposition into the provinces of Gaul, Dec. 31, 405, passed on to Spain at 409, renewed their attacks in 411, and established themselves in the south in 420, and over the whole country by 428. VANE.-The marble tower built at Athens by Andronicus Cyrrhestes (about B.C. 100) was surmounted by a vane, and Varro had an apparatus at his farm to indicate the direction of the wind, B.C. 37. A costly pillar was erected at Constantinople for a similar purpose in the 8th century. A vane in the form of a horseman was placed on the top of a tower at Hems, in Syria, in 1151. In Europe vanes are mentioned as early as the oth century. In France none but noblemen were allowed to have them on their houses in the 12th century. The Danish fleet, under Sweyn, in 1013, carried vanes in the shape of birds or dragons at their mast-

VANNES (France) is supposed by some to occupy the site of the ancient Dariorigum, the capital of the Veneti, whence its modern ap-pellation. The Bretons still call it Wenet or Guenet. A council was held here in 465. It was besieged by Edward III. in 1342. He failed in his enterprise, and concluded a three years' truce, through the intervention of the Pope's legate, in 1343. The battle of Auray (q.z.) was fought near Vannes. An insurrection of peasants was suppressed by the national guard with great slaughter in Feb., 1750. The French emigrants, under the Chevalier de Silz, who attempted to take Vannes by surprise, were defeated by Gen. Hoche in May, 1795. VAN, or WAN (Asiatic Turkey).—Tradition refers the origin of this town, in a pachalic of the same name in Armenia, to Semiramis, and it undoubtedly exhibits traces of extreme antiquity. It is said to have been rebuilt about the time of Alexander III., by an Armenian prince named Wan, from whom it is named; and Valarsaces I. (B.C. 149—B.C. 127) made it the strongest place in his dominions. It was taken by Togrul Beg in 1032, by Tamerlane in 1392, and by Abbas the Great of Persia in 1585. In 1639 it was ceded to the Ottoman empire. M. Schulz examined the antiquities of this place in 1827, and the inscriptions were copied by Layard in 1850.

VARNA (European Turkcy), near the site of the ancient Odessus, was occupied by the Bulgarians in 679, and plundered by them in 1793. Ladislaus IV., king of Hungary, was de-feated and slain in a battle fought here with the Turks, commanded by Amurath II., when 10,000 Christians fell, Nov. 10, 1444. The Russians, who failed in an attack upon it in 1773, succeeded in capturing it, after a siege of three months, Oct. 11, 1828. It was restored to Tur-key Sep. 14, 1829. A council of war was held at Varna by the Turkish minister of war, Riza Pasha, the Turkish generalissimo, Omar Pasha, and the Allied generals and admirals, May 18. 1854. The troops from Scutari and other places arrived here early in June, and by the end of the month a camp of 60,000 English, French, and Turkish soldiers had been formed. Sickness broke out in Aug. The French portion of the army began to embark for the Crimea Sep. 5, the English Sep. 7, and the combined fleets, with their transports, amounting to 700 vessels, set sail Sep. 10.

VAUXHALL BRIDGE (London).-This iron bridge was commenced May o. 1811, and opened

June 4, 1816. VAUXHALL GARDENS (London).—Fulke de Breauté built a hall in South Lambeth, about 1282, which was called Fulke's Hall, afterwards corrupted into Faukeshall, Foxhall, and finally Vauxhall. The gardens, opened in 1661, under the title of the New Spring Gardens, were notorious for the licentiousness of the company by which they were frequented during the Stuart period. Evelyn, in his Diary (July 2, 1661), speaks of having visited them. About 1712 they appear to have declined in popularity. They were purchased by Jonathan Tyers and re-opened with an al fresco entertainment, June 7, 1732, and under the management of the new proprietor proved successful. The name Spring Gardens was not abandoned till 1785, and the firework exhibitions, which for a long period constituted the chief feature of the place, were commenced in Vauxhall Gardens were sold by auction for £20,200, Sep. 9, 1841. VEHMIC or FEHMIC COURTS, also called the Vehm-Gericht, formed a secret tribunal of Westphalia, which received the name Red Land in consequence. Its principal seat was in the town of Dortmund, and it possessed ramifications throughout Germany. It is said to have been formed on account of the severe laws respecting religion enacted by Charlemagne in 800. This tribunal reached its greatest prominence in the 13th century. Its members, who were bound by an oath of secrecy, numbered at one time 100,000 persons. It continued to exercise judicial functions till the end of the 15th century, and was entirely suppressed by Charles V. in 1532.

VEII (Etruria).—The Veientes, or Veientincs,

the inhabitants of this city, on the river Cremera, are first mentioned in history as having been engaged in hostilities with Romulus, who gained a decisive victory over them, and, after exacting severe terms from the vanquished, concluded a treaty of peace for 100 years, B.C. 722. War, however, again broke out between them, in which the Romans under Tullus Hostilius gained the mastery, B.C. 673-641; and a similar result followed hostilities in the reign of Ancus Martius, B.C. 641-617. Under L. Tarquinius, Veii was again vanquished, together with 11 other Etruscan cities, its allies a success which the victor commemorated, it is said, by the institution of the 12 lictors and their fasces, B.C. 535—510. Aided by a great number of volunteers, the Veientes again took the field against their old enemy, and a drawn battle ensued, when the Romans lost their consul, with many tribunes and centurions, B.C. 481. The Fabii, having offered their services to the state, established a permanent camp to stop the marauding expeditions from Veii, but were drawn into an ambuscade and sain, July 16, B.C. 477. A true of 40 years was concluded with the Veientes by the Romans B.C. 474, and another truce for 20 years B.C. 425. War was declared against them B.C. 406, their city was besieged B.C. 405, and after a siege, which, like that of Troy, lasted 10 years, it was taken by means of a mine by the Romans, who slaughtered or sold into slavery the inhabitants, carried off the image of Juno, the tutelary deity, and divided the territory amongst Roman citizens, B.C. s96. After the burning of Rome by the Gauls, B.C. 390, it was proposed to convert Veii into a new capital. From this period Veil gradually fell into decay, and seems to have been divided by Julius Cæsar among his soldiers, B.C. 45. The castle, known by the name of Isola Farnese, was built on the south side of the city in the was built on the south side of the erry in the beginning of the 11th century. VELLETRI (Italy), the ancient Velitra, included within the limits of Latium, was besieged and taken by the eonsul P. Virginius, B.C. 494. The population having been reduced by pestilence, a Roman colony was sent, B.C. 492, which was followed by another settlement B.C. 404. Velletri was taken by the Romans in consequence of a revolt, B.c. 380. It was occupied by Belisarius in 538. Near the town Carlo Borbone defeated the Austrians, and was proclaimed King of Naples, May 25, 1734. The cathedral of San Clemente was erected in 1660, and the church of Santa Maria in 1353.

VELLORE (Hindostan).—Major Lawrence wrested this fort from the French, July 8, 1752. During the wars in India, it was frequently besieged. Sir Eyre Coote relieved it by a brilliant victory, Sep. 27, 1781, and it was selected by government as the residence of Tippoo's family, after the fall of Seringapatam, May 4, 1799. A mutiny amongst the native troops broke out here July 10, 1806. It was speedily suppressed, and 800 of them were executed.

VENETI, the inhabitants of a part of Gaul, corresponds to the French department of Morbihan, and was the most powerful mari-time state on the Atlantic. The Veneti rose against the Romans, and sent to Britain for assistance, B.C. 57. They seized two Roman officers as hostages, and having been defeated in a naval engagement, surrendered unconditionally to Julius Cæsar, B.C. 56. He sold those who had escaped slaughter into slavery, and put to death all the members of the state assembly.

VENETIAN REPUBLIC (Europe).-This republic of Northern Italy derives its name from the Veneti, who regarded themselves as a tribe of Trojan origin, which settled at the head of the Adriatic under the leadership of Antenor, and dispossessed the Euganeans, the original possessors of the soil. (See Padua.) Other authorities believe them to be a branch of the Slavonian race, and regard the name Veneti, or Venedi, as a corruption of the German Wends, which was applied to all Slavonian tribes. The Venetian territory was invaded tribes. by the Gauls B.C. 349, and in consequence of the repeated encroachments of that people, the inhabitants concluded an alliance with the Romans B.C. 215. Some Gauls who attempted to settle here B.C. 186 were compelled to return to their own country by the Romans. The Veneti were admitted to the privileges of Roman citizens about B.C. 40. VENEZUELA (S. America) was partly discovered by Columbus in 1498, and partly by Ojeda and Vespucci in 1499. Cumana was settled in 1523, and Coro in 1527. The Dutch took possession of the island of Curaçoa in 1634. It formed a part of the government of New Granada till 1731. When Napoleon I.

made his brother Joseph King of Spain in 1808, it still adhered to the old dynasty, but asserted its independence in 1810, and returned to its allegiance to Spain in 1812. Bolivar commenced his struggles to liberate it from the metal-country in 1813, and this was effected in 1823. It joined with New Granada and Quito to form the republic of Colombia in 1819, and the constitution was remodelled in 1843, and Spain recognized its independence by treaty signed at Madrid, March 30, 1845. A war between the native population and the whites, which broke out in 1846, lasted till 1849. Such was the state of its finances, that the expenditure for 1852-3 was three times the amount of the receipts. Gen. Paez was elected president, with dictatorial power, Sep. 8, 1861. His election was followed by turmoils, which were terminated by a treaty concluded at Coche, April 23, 1863. In consequence of this treaty Paez retired from the Presidency, June 15, and the national representatives assembled at Vittona, and elected Gen. Falcon in his stead, June 17. An opposition to this election was organized at Porto-Cabello by Gen. Leon, but the insurgents were compelled to evacuate that town Oct. 4, when the majority of them surrendered to the government. A treaty of commerce with Denmark was signed Aug. 10. The Congress assembled at Caracas re-elected Gen. Falcon president, March 18, 1865, and on his resignation Vice-president Blanco succeeded

VENICE (Italy) .- This city on the Adriatic, of which it is called the Queen, was founded by refugees from Padua, from the fury of Attila, between 421, when a church was established in the Rialto island, and 452, when a consular government was adopted. great Campanile was commenced in 902, and the cathedral of St. Mark was founded on the site of an earlier edifice in 977. A fire which occurred in 1106 destroyed the greater part of the city, which was rebuilt in stone and marble. The celebrated columns were brought from the Holy Land in 1127, and were erected on their present site about 1180. The bank was established in 1157. The bishopric of Venice was founded in 733. Councils were held here in 1040, and Aug. 14, 1177. The Inquisition was established in 1249; a medical or botanical garden in 1333; the Lazaretto in 1423; and the Bible was translated into Italian here, in 1471. A fire at the arsenal, Sep. 13, 1569, occasioned an explosion, which laid great part of the city in ruins. The bridge of the Rialto, founded in 1583, was built from the designs of Antonio da Ponte. The Dogana was erected in 1682. Venice, occupied by Napoleon Buonaparte, was ceded to Austria in 1797; and by the treaty of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805, it was transferred to Presourg, Dec. 20, 1005, it was transferred to the French. The Academy of Arts was founded by Napoleon I. in 1807. On the dissolution of the French kingdom of Italy in 1814, Venice was ceded to Austria, and in 1830 it was de clared a free port. An insurrection commenced under Daniel Manin March 22, 1848, and the republic was proclaimed. It was besieged in the summer, and surrendered Aug. 22, 1849. By the treaty of Villafranca, July 11, 1859,

Venice was declared part of the Italian confederation subject to the Emperor of Austria. Venice and the territory constituting Venetia were ceded to the new kingdom of Italy by the treaty of peace concluded with Austria at Vienna, Oct. 3, 1866, and the city was delivered to the custody of the municipal authorities Oct. 19. The result of the voting was announced Oct. 29 as almost unanimous in favour of annexoct. 29 as almost unanimous in layour of talliex-ation with Italy. A decree for the union was signed at Turin Nov. 4, and Victor Emanuel I. made his public entry into Venice Nov. 7. VENLO, or VENLOO (Holland), was cap-tured by Marlborough, who allowed the garrison to leave with the honours of war, Sep. 23, 1702. The French general Miranda bombarded it Feb. 11, 1793. It was invested by Gen. Moreau Oct. 8, and it surrendered Oct. 26, 1794. It was ceded to France in 1795, restored to the Netherlands in 1814, seized by the Belgians in 1830, and restored to Holland in 1831.

VENOSA (Italy), the ancient Venusia, was captured by the Roman consul L. Postumius, B.C. 262. T. Varro took refuge here after the defeat at Canne, Aug. 2, B.C. 216.
VENTILATION.—For some time no means of ventilation existed excepting that afforded by the doors and windows, or by holes in the walls and ceilings. Dr. Desaguliers was employed in 1723 to improve the ventilation of the House of Commons, and in 1734 he invented his fan-ventilator. In 1741 Samuel Sutton was ordered by Government to fix a ventilator of his own invention in the Norwich man-of-war. Deacon introduced ventilation by means of hot air in 1813; and a similar plan was adopted by the Marquis of Chabannes in ventilating the London theatres in 1816, and the House of Commons in 1820. After the destruction of the House of Commons by fire in 1834 a temporary building was erected, provided with extensive ventilating apparatus designed by Dr. Reid, whose system possessed many advantages. Dr. Neil Arnott's work on Warming and Ventilating appeared in 1838, and directed considerable attention to the subject. A commission to examine the laws of ventilation was appointed in 1859, at the instance of the Board of Health, and presented a report.

VENTRILOQUISM .- Allusion is probably made to this art by Isaiah (xxix. 4): "And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust," B.C. 713. It was practised by the Greeks, and by most ancient nations, and was held to be a supernatural gift. In modern times it is known to have been made use of to secure certain personal advantages by Louis Brabant, valet to Francis I. (1515—47). Baron Mengen, of Vienna, practised the art, and produced a complete illusion on his auditors, about 1770; and M. town in France, by the English, under the Duke of Bedford, Aug. 17, 1424.

VERNEUIL (France).-A town in Perche, fortified in the 12th century by Henry I. of England, was frequently assailed during the wars between France and England, and remained in the possession of the English till 1449. The castle of Verneuil, in the department of the Oise, was built by Henry IV., who made it a marquisate. It was raised to a duchy by Louis XIV in 1682.

VERNON (France).—This town, on the frontiers of Normandy, several times assailed, was ceded to France in 1198. The English took it in 1419, and kept possession until 1449. VERNON GALLERY.—In 1847 Robert Vernon presented to the nation his collection of 162 modern paintings by English artists. In 1850 they were removed from the cellars at the Royal Academy, Trafalgar Square, where they had been previously exhibited, to Marlborough House; and in 1859 they were transferred to South Kensington Museum.

VERONA (Italy), under the Roman dominion, became a colony with the surname of Augusta. The Emperor Philip lost his life Augusta. The Emperor Philip lost his life here in 249. The citry, walled during the reign of Gallienus, in 265, was besieged and captured by Constantine I. in 312. Odoacer was defeated by Theodoric, near Verona, Sep. 27, 489. The city was captured by Charlemagne in 774. Schools were established by Lothaire I, in 820. Louis of Arles, defeated here by Berenger I., was made a prisoner, and had his eyes put out in 905. Berenger I., who had received the title of emperor from the Pope, was assassinated by the inhabitants in 924. The march was ceded to 0tho I. in 952. The Emperor Henry III, bestowed it upon Guelph III. in 1047. A large portion of the amphitheatre erected by the Romans was overthrown by an earthways in 100 me. earthquake in 1184. It assumed a republican form of government in 1107, was engaged in hostilities with Padua in 1141, united in the league formed against Frederick I. with other towns of Lombardy in 1164, and submitted to Eccelino da Romano, the Ghibelline leader, in 1227. Delivered from his tyranny, it chose for its podesta Mastino della Scala in 1262. It was seized by Gian Galeazzo Visconti in 1387, and after an obstinate resistance surrendered to Francesco Carrara in 1404. After a siege which reduced the inhabitants to a state of famine, it submitted to Venice, July 16, 1405, and delivered up its keys to the Emperor Maximilian I. in 1509. Maximilian I. mortgaged it to Louis XII. for a sum of money in 1510. It was besieged by the French, and restored It was besieged by the French, and restored to Venice by the peace of Brussels, Dec. 4, 1516. The confederate armies captured it in 1745. The French general-in-chief established his head-quarters here, June 3, 1796. The people rose against the French garrison and massacred them, in April, 1797, and this is called the Vespers of Verona. A complete defeat was sustained by the French in a battle with the Austrians, March 28, 29, 30, 1799. It was secured to Austria by the congress of Vienna in 1815. A European congress held here decided upon the evacuation of Piedmont and Naples by the Austrian troops, Dec. 14, 1822. Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, defeated the Austrians here May 6, 1848. The Austrians strengthened its fortifications, and it formed one of the celebrated Quadrilateral ceded to Italy by the treaty signed at Vienna, Oct. 3, 1866. Verona was delivered to the Italian authorities Oct. 16, 1866. VERSAILLES (France).—A lazar-house was established at this place as early as 1350. In 1579, Albert de Gondi, Archbishop of Paris, purchased an estate here, which was bought by Louis XIII. in 1632, and made the site of a royal hunting lodge. In 1661 Louis XIV. resolved to establish his court at Versailles, and commenced the palace and gardens, which were sufficiently advanced to be occupied in 1672. (See TRIANON.) Louis XIV. held a carrousel here in 1664. Versailles became the royal residence in 1681. The chapel was completed in 1710, and the theatre in 1770. Louis XVI. summoned the États Généraux to meet here May 5, 1789, and at the outbreak of the French Revolution, the mob attacked Versailles and compelled the royal family to return to the Tuileries, Oct. 5 and 6. The national Museum, founded by Louis Philippe, was inaugurated in 1837. The school of artillery for the Imperial Guard was established in 1856.

1786, Sep. 26. Of commerce between France and England.

VERSE.—The earliest kind of verse employed in Grecian poetry was the hexameter or dactylic metre, which was said to have been invented by the mythical Pythoness Phemone, and which remained the standard verse for epic poctry throughout the classic period. The elegiac metro, produced by using alternate hexameter and pentameter verses, originated about the beginning of the 7th century E.A. Archilochus, who flourished B.C. 714—B.C. 676 is the reputed inventor of Iambic and Trochaic verse, and Alcaus, B.C. 611, gave his name to the Alcaic verse. Arion perfected the ancient Dithyrambic mctre, which had been previously employed in the choral songs to Bacchus about B.c. 585. Hipponax, who flourished B.c. 546— B.c. 520, introduced a modification of the Iambic verse, known as the Choliambic metre, which was specially adapted for the expression of homely sentiments. The Saturnian verse, the original metre of the Roman poets, is generally ascribed to the Etruscans. The ancient Fescennine verse was introduced at a very early period in Latium, and was perverted into a vehicle for libel, in consequence of which it was prohibited by the laws of the Twelve Tables, B.C. 450. The other metres of the Tables, B.C. 450. The other metres of the Romans were founded on those of the Greeks. The metres of the moderns were chicfly derived from the Latin, and the earliest example of verse in a modern language is a fragmentary poem of Boethius in French, which has been referred to 1000. (See BLANK, LEONINE, and MACARONIC VERSE.)

VERSIFIERS. -- (See Improvisatori and POET LAUREATE.)

VERULAM, VEROLAMIUM, or VERULAMIUM (Britannia).—On the site of this town, taken by Julius Cæsar in May, B.C. 54, and afterwards called Old Verulam, the modern St. Albans (q, v) is supposed to have been built.

concluded a treaty at this town, May 2, 1598, with Henry IV. of France, restoring all the with Henry IV. of France, restoring all the places he had seized during the war. The Duke of Savoy was included in the peace. Vervins, taken by the Spaniards in 1653, was recaptured by the French in 1654.

VESERIS.—The battle of Vesuvius (q. v.) was said to have been fought near Veseris, which is believed to have been a small river in Campania, though some authorities contend that it was a town.

VESONTIO. - (See Besangon.)

VESOUL (France), founded in the oth century, was sacked by the English in 1360. The Burgundians defeated the French here March 19, 1477, and the town suffered from the ravages of war in 1595, 1636, and 1644.

VESPERS, or EVENING SONG. — The evening prayer of the Romish Church, so named from Vesper, the evening star, is mentioned by the most ancient fathers, and was certainly celebrated in the eastern churches during the 3rd and 4th centuries, (See Siction Vespers, Verona, &c.)

VESPRIM, VESZPRIM, or WESPRIM (Hungary).—The fortress, often besieged by the Turks, was seized by Soliman I. in 1552, was recovered from the Turks in 1598, and was dismantled in 1702.

VESTALS. — Virgin pricetesses of Vesta existed in Etruria and among the Sabines before they were instituted at Rome. According to tradition, Romulus and Remus were the sons of the vestal Ilia, who was compelled to violate her oath of chastity, and punished by being buried alive, B.C. 770. Numa Pompilius (B.C. 715—B.C. 673) is regarded as the founder of the order at Rome, as he instituted four virgin pricstesses of Vesta, whose duty it was to minister in her temple and to watch, by turns, the sacred fire on the altar. Two more were added by Tarquinius Priscus (B.C. 616-B.C. 578), or by Servius Tullius (B.C. 578-B.C. 534). The law of Numa inflicted death by stoning on vestals guilty of incontinence; but Tarquinius Priscus enforced the penalty of burying alive. The most celebrated instances of the infliction of this penalty were those of the vestal Opimia, B.C. 481; of Urbinia, B.C. 470; of Misurtia, B.C. 337; Sextilia, B.C. 273; and Licinia, who, with several of her companions, was convicted of incest, B.C. 116. In every case the corrupter of a vestal's purity was scourged to death. Domitian enforced the laws respecting the strict manner of the life of the vestals, and two found guilty of incontinence were allowed to kill themselves, whilst a third, Cornelia, was buried alive in 91. The vestals were abolished by Theodosius I. in 389.

VESUVIUS (Battle).—The armies of Latium and Rome met on the banks of the Veseris, in the plains of Campania, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, E.C. 340. It was revealed to the Roman consuls, T. Manlius Torquatus and P. Decius Mus, in a dream the night before the battle, that the gods had doomed the general on one side and the army on the Albans (q, v) is supposed to have been other, and in the morning they agreed that in case either wing met with a check, the VERVINS (France). — Philip II. of Spain general in command of that should offer his life as a sacrifice. The left beginning to waver, Decius immediately summoned the chief pontiff Valerius, and having repeated the formula, rushed into the thickest of the Latin army. This act of heroism was repeated by his son, P. Decius Mus, at Sentinum (q. v.), and on both occasions the Romans were victorious.

VESUVIUS (Naples). - It is believed that an eruption took place in 63, when but little damage was done; and the first recorded eruption took place Aug. 24, 79, when Herculaneum and Pompeii (q. v.) were overwhelmed, and about 200,000 persons perished, amongst whom was Pliny the Elder, who, on perceiving the eruption, had repaired to Stabiæ and landed at the villa of his friend Pomponianus. Other eruptions of less violent character occurred in 203, 472, 512, 685, 993, 1036, 1049, 1139, 1306, and 1500. An eruption which burst forth Sep. 29, 1538, resulted in the formation of Monte Nuovo. It was forced up by subterranean convulsions to a height of 413 feet in two days. A very violent eruption took place Dec. 17, 1631, and overwhelmed Torre del Greco and other villages at the foot of the mountain, besides causing the death of 18,000 persons. It was again active Aug. 12, 1682, when a conical projection was formed in the centre of the great crater, which was nearly filled up by a succession of small discharges in 1689. A series of violent eruptions commenced May 20, and continued till Aug, 1707; and the ashes, &c., were thrown with much violence upon Naples, where they produced great consternation, Aug. 2. A violent eruption took place May 20, 1737, and the mountain commenced pouring forth destructive torrents of lava, &c., Oct. 25, 1751, and continued active for 25 days, during which time the central cone sank, leaving an immense gap in its place. Another eruption took place from Aug. between Oct. 12, 1784, and Dec. 20, 1785. A violent eruption, which raged from Feb., 1793, till Midsummer, 1794, and which attained its height June 15, 1794, poured a torrent of lava through Torre del Greco, where the cathedral and several churches, with most of the houses, were destroyed. A new crater opened Sep. 4, 1809, and the mountain continued more or less active for about four years. A series of violent disturbances commenced Oct. 22, 1822, during which the great cone fell in, and torrents of lava were poured over the adjacent country. The village of Caposecco was overwhelmed by an eruption in Aug., 1834. The volcano commenced violent action Feb. 6, 1850, and remained disturbed till the end of the month, during which time a tract of nine square miles was covered by the lava. Eruptions took place May 1-28, 1855; a grand one commenced May 21, 1858, and continued for some weeks, and the crater again fell in. The mountain was again active in Aug., 1859, and a series of violent eruptions commenced Dec. 8, 1861, and caused the destruction of Torre del Greco.

VIBORG, VYBORG, WIBORG, or WYBORG (Finland).—This city of European Russia was fortified in 1293 by Torkel Knutson, Regent of Sweden, and became the capital of Carelia. It was besieged by the Russians in 1322, in 1359, and in 1496, and was taken by Peter I. in 1710. By the peace of Nystadt, Aug. 30, 1721, Viborg was definitely ceded to Russia by the Sweden and Russia was concluded at this place Feb. 28, 1609. A severe naval engagement took place off the port, between the Russians and Swedes, July 3, 1790, when the latter were defeated with the loss of nine ships of the line and three frigates, besides several smaller vessels.

VICE .- This character in the Mediæval mystery and morality plays was originally introduced as an embodiment of vice, and is stated by Hallam (Lit. Hist., vol. i. part i. ch. viii. p. 45) "to have gradually acquired a human individuality, in which he came very near to our well-known Punch. The devil was generally introduced in company with the Vice, and had to endure many blows from him." He was attired in a long jerkin, and wore a cap with ass's ears, and he was armed with a thin wooden dagger with which to belabour the devil. The Vice was especially popular about the beginning of the 16th century, and he ceased to be in fashion at the end of the vice-chancellor. — Authority to appoint a vice-chancellor of England, a judge in equity, was given by 53 Geo. III. c. 24 (March 23, 1813), and Sir Thomas Plumer was appointed April 10. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 5 (Oct. 5, 1841), two additional vice-chancellors were created. Certain provisions of these acts were repealed by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 29 (July 15, 1850).

VICENZA (Italy), capital of a province of the same name, and the ancient Vicentia, or Vicetia, is first mentioned as having its limits fixed by the proconsul Sex. Atilius Saranus, B.C. 136; and afterwards as a municipal town, B.C. 43. It was plundered by Alaric I. in 401, and wasted with fire and sword by Attila, in 452. It joined the famous Lombard league against the Emperor Frederick I. in 1175; was captured by Frederick II. in 1236, and seized by Eccelino da Romano in 1256. It afterwards fell to Alberico, his brother, from whose tyranny it was delivered by Padua, and held in subjection in 1269. Alboin and Cane della Scala reduced it to the Ghibelline cause in 1311, and Gian Galeazzo Visconti seized it after murdering his uncle, in 1387. Ceded to Venice in 1403, it surrendered to the plenipotentiary of the Emperor Maximilian I., and was retaken by the Venetians in 1500. The French captured it, and it was wrested from them by Venice in 1510. It was occupied by French troops, under Gen. Victor, April 28, 1797. The Austrians assailed it ineffectually May 23, 1848; and it capitulated to Radetsky after a severe bombardment, June 11, 1848. VICH, or VIC D'OSONA (Spain), was sacked by the Moors in 713, and has been frequently assailed. The French defeated the Spaniards in the neighbourhood in 1810 and 1823.

VICHY (France) was taken by Charles VII. in 1440. It is celebrated for its mineral waters.

VIENNA (Conferences).—During the Russian war, a conference of the representatives of the four great powers assembled at Vienna, for the purpose of adjusting the question pacifically, July 24, 1853. The congress adopted the well-known Vienna note July 31. It was accepted by Russia Aug. 10, but the Turkish Government demanded some alterations Aug. 10, which were rejected by the Czar Sep. 7. The result was the declaration of war by Turkey,

The congress addressed another note Oct. 5. to the Porte, expressing the regret of the great powers at the war, and requesting information on the conditions on which Turkey would treat for peace, Dec. 5; and the Turkey would rear-for peace, Dec. 5; and the Turkish Government, in a reply dated Dec. 31, named the earliest possible evacuation of the principalities, the renewal of treaties, the maintenance of the religious privileges of all communities, and a definite regulation of the Holy Places, as the indispensable grounds of negotiation. These four points were admitted by the congress Jan. 13, 1854, and the meeting was dissolved Jan. 16.—Another congress assembled March 15, 1855, was composed of plenipotentiaries from Great Britain (Lord John Russell and the Earl of Westmorland), France, Austria, Turkey, and Russia (Prince Gortschakoff). After agreeing on the questions relative to the principalities and to the navigation of the Danube, a dispute commenced respecting the restriction of Russian power in the Black Sea, which resulted in an adjournment of the congress, March 26. M. Drouyn de Lhuys and Aali Pasha arrived at Vienna as additional ministers April 6, and negotiations were resumed April 17.

Lord John Russell withdrew from Vicnna Vienna April 23, in consequence of the dissatisfaction his policy had created in England; and M. Drouyn de Lhuys also left the conference, April 27. The congress terminated without producing any satisfactory results, June 4.

VIENNA (Congress) .- The first congress of Vienna was convened by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814, for the settlement of the affairs of Europe after the abdication of Napolcon I. The day appointed for the opening of the congress was Aug. 1, but it was afterwards resolved that the meeting should be postponed till Oct. The Duke of Saxe-Weimar arrived at Vieuna Sep. 17; the Kings of Denmark and of Würtemberg, and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, Sep. 22; the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, Sep. 25; the King of Bavaria and the Duke of Brunswick, Sep. 28; the Elector of Hesse and the Prince of Nassau-Weiburg, Sep. 30; and the Grand-duke of Baden, Oct. 2. Besides the sovereign princes, the congress was composed of plenipotentiaries from the courts of Austria (Prince Metternich and others), Spain, France (Prince Talleyrand, &c.), Great Britain (Lord Castlereagh, and afterwards the Duke of Wellington, with others), Portugal, Prussia, Russia (Count Nesselrode, &c.), Sweden, Denmark, and other minor states. The first official declaration of the congress was issued Oct. 8, and announced the postponement of the formal opening till Nov. 1, when business commenced under the presidency of Prince Metternich. After the return of Napoleon I. from Elba, the congress published a declaration, March 13, 1815, announcing that he had thereby broken all eivil and social ties, and had rendered himself a political outlaw. The principal arrangements of the congress were collected in one grand act of 121 articles, which was signed by the ministers of Great Britain, Austria, France, Portugal, Prussia, Russia, and Sweden, June 9, 1815. VILLAIN, or VILLEIN.—The name applied by the Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Normans to their slaves. After the Conquest in 1066, there were four classes of slaves in England: villains in gross, who were the absolute property of their masters, and were employed in the most menial offices; villains regardant, otherwise styled prædial slaves, who were attached to the soil, and followed the occupation of husbandmen: and two smaller divisions, known as cottarii and bordarii. The method for the amereement of villains is prescribed by 9 Hen. III. e. 14 (1225), and their performance of homage to their feudal lords was regulated by 17 Edw. II. stat. 2 (1324). By 25 Edw. VINDONISSA (Switzerland) .- The 21st Roman legion was in 71 stationed at this strong fortress, at the junction of the three Swiss rivers which fall into the Rhine above Basel (Smith's Hist. of the World, iii. ch. xxxviii.). It was the seat of the first bishopric in this art of Europe, afterwards removed to Constance. The Gauls were defeated here by Constantius in 296. The city was ravaged by the Vandals, by the Alemanni, and by the Huns. Childebert II. destroyed it in the 6th century. Gibbon says: "Within the ancient walls of Vindonissa, the castle of Habsburg, the abby of Königsfeld, and the town of Bruck, have successively arisen."

VINE and VINE DISEASE.—Noah is said to have planted a vineyard, B.C. 2247 (Gen. ix. 20). It is supposed that the culture of the vine passed from Persia into Asia Minor, and thence into Greece and Southern Europe; and it is known to have been introduced into France by the Phocean founders of Marseilles, B.C. 600. Vines are said to have been first brought to England by command of the Emperor Probus, about 280, the year its culture was introduced into Gaul; and the Venerable Bede speaks of vineyards as common in this country in 731. Vines were planted at Tokay, in Hungary, in the 13th century. They were introduced into Madeira about 1421, and were first planted at the Cape of Good Hope by the Dutch in 1650. The Catawba vine of America began to attract attention about 1826. The vine disease, O'dium Tuckeri, first appeared in an English hothouse in 1845. In 1847 it was noticed in France; and in 1851 its destructive ravages extended to Italy. (See Hampton COURT.)

VIOL, VIOLIN, &c.—"Stringed instruments played with a bow," says Engel (The Music of the Most Ancient Nations, ch. ii.) "seem to have been unknown to the Assyrians, as well as to the Hebrews and Egyptians. It is true some historians mention Hebrew instruments played with a bow, but they have in translating apparently mistaken the pleetrum for a bow. on the other hand there are indications of the existence of a kind of violin in Asia at a very remote period. M. Sonnerat tells us that the Hindoos maintain that the ravanastrou, one of their old instruments played with a bow, was invented about 5,000 years ago by Ravanen, a mighty king in Ceylon," The viol, a six-stringed fretted instrument played with a bow, was in use as early as the 5th century, and the violin, which differs in having only four strings, dates from about the same period. During the Middle Agesthe violin was regarded as a vulgar instrument unworthy the attention of musicians of refinement, and it was not till the Italian Baltazarini was sent as a leader of a band of violins to France, for the gratification of Catherine de Medici, that it became fashion-able. About the beginning of the 17th century it became an important instrument in concerted pieces, and the celebrated violins of the Amati family, of Cremona, were made in great quan-tities as early as 1620. Charles II. rendered the violin afashionable instrument in England soon after his restoration in 1660. Nicolo Paganini, the eminent violinist, who was born at Genoa in 1784, visited England in 1831, and died at Nice May 27, 1840.

VIRGIN (Black) .- (See CZENSTOCHAU.) VIRGINIA (N. America) received its name from Queen Elizabeth. (See ROANGKE.) The county, at first called Virginia, has since been known as Carolina, whilst the territory to the north took the name of Virginia. James I. granted the southern part of the state to a London company by letters patent, April 10, 1606; and the first colonists, 105 in number, settled on the banks of the James river, calling the place James Town, in honour of the king, May 13, 1607. The colony was recruited by fresh emigrants, who arrived with Lord Delaware as governor, June 10, 1610, and by another batch, under Sir Thomas Gates, in Aug., 1611. (See LOTTERY.) A constitution was granted in July, 1621. A general slaughter of the settlers was committed March 22, 1622, by the Indians, who made another attempt, in which they only partially succeeded, April 18, 1644. The first constitution was adopted for legislative pur-poses June 29, 1776. The importation of slaves was forbidden by the state legislature, under was formation by the state legislature, times heavy penalties, in 1778. Its constitution was revised in 1830. Virginia seceded from the United States April 17, 1861. The western portion maintained its allegiance to the Federal Government, and was admitted as a separate state of the Union by the name of Western Virginia, or Kanawha (q.v.), Dec. 31, 1862. VISIGOTHS, or THERVINGI,—The division of the Gothic nation into the Eastern or Ostrogoths (q.v.), and Western or Visigoths, took place about 330. The Visigoths assisted Pro-copius against the Romans in 365. Valens permitted them to settle south of the Danube in 376, and they tendered their submission to the Romans, when Theodosius I. granted them permission to occupy Thrace, in 382. They the Romans, when Theodossus I, granted them permission to occupy Thrace, in 382. They ravaged Thessaly in 395, under their leader Alaric I., whom they elected king in 398; and they invaded Italy in 400. They took Rome Aug. 24, 410, invaded Gaul in 412, in the south of which they established a kingdom in 410. They penetrated into Spain, and established a monarchy in that country in 411. Clovis I. expelled them from France in 507, and the Moors overthrew their power in Spain in 711. VISITATION.—(See FEASTS.) VITEBSK.—(See WITEPSK.)

VITERBO (Italy), capital of a legation of the same name, supposed to occupy the site of the Fanum Voltumne, where the ancient Etruscans held their confederate assemblies, is said to have been built or enclosed by Desiderius, the last of the Lombard kings (757—774). Pope Adrian IV., an Englishman, compelled the Emperor Frederick I. (Barbarossa) to hold the stirrup of his mule while he dismounted at the piazza before the cathedral as mounted at the plazza before the extraction in 1155. Having maintained its independence as a free municipality, it was obliged to submit to Rome about 1200. The Romans marched against it and were ignominiously defeated by the Viterbans, led by the Count of Toulouse and the Bishop of Winchester, in 1234. A treaty was concluded here in 1267, between Charles of Anjou and Baldwin II. who had fled to Italy after the fall of Constan-Viterbo was captured by Ladislaus, King of Naples, in 1413. A defensive alliance was also formed here between Pope Leo X. and Francis I. of France, in Oct., 1515. The town-hall was commenced in 1264, and the episcopal palace, containing the great hall, where several popes of the Middle Ages were elected, was built in the 13th century. There is a tradition that Prince Henry, son of the Earl of Cornwall, was murdered at the high altar of the cathedral by Guy, fourth son of Simon de Montfort, who fell at the battle of Evesham, Aug. 4, 1265.
VITI.—(See Feejee Islands.)

VITORIA or VITTORIA (Spain), founded in 581, and so named by Sancho VI. of Navarre, to commemorate a victory over the Moors, about 1180, was occupied by the French in 1808. A signal victory was gained here by Sir Arthur Wellesley over the French, under the command of Joseph Buonaparte and Jourdan, June 21, 1813. So complete was the rout, that of the 70,000 men who marched under the French standard, not one remained on Spanish soil June 27. (See Carmer 4.)

VITRY SUR MARNE, or VITRY-LE-FRANÇOIS (France).-This town, formerly a place of considerable importance, was seized and burned by Louis VII. in 1144, when 1,300 of the inhabitants perished from fire in a church. In expiation of this offence, the king under-took the second crusade in 1146. Vitry, after having been gradually restored, was again de-stroyed by Charles V. in 1544, in consequence of which Francis I, founded Vitry-le-François, at a little distance from the original town, in VIZIER.—"Who among you will be my vizier!" (i.e. burden-bearer) asked Mohammed among 40 of his followers at the commencement of his career, in 6cg. Among the Turks the office of grand vizier was created for Aladin, the brother of Orchan, in 1326. So precarious was their position, that three years and a half was the average tenure of the office of 115 who had filled it down to 1683. VLAARDINGEN.—(See MACASSAR.)

VLADIMIR, WLADIMIR, or WOLODOMIR (Russia).—This city, founded in 1158, is one of the most ancient in Russia. It was originally a place of great importance, and, until 1318 was the seat of the government of the grand duchy of Vladimir, before called the duchy of Suzdal. VOLCANO.—Monte Nuovo, a Neapolitan volcano, was thrown up during an eruption of Vesuvius in 1538. Jorullo, in Mexico, suddenly rose to a height of 1,600 feet in 1750, and has remained quiescent ever since; and the volcano of Izalco, in Central America, was thrown up Feb. 23, 1770, and has since been constantly in action. Grahame's, or Hotham's, Island, or Ferdinandea, a volcanic island in the Mediterranean Sea, was heaved up from a depth of 100 fathoms, to a height of 230 feet above the water, July 31, 1831, and remained visible for three months, when it again sank below the surface. An army sent by them to besiege Rome was completely routed. The consuls Virginius and Coriolanus defeated them in different engagements, B.C. 493. Coriolanus is said to have found refuge with them after his banishment from Rome, and to have led them against the Romans, who were compelled to sue for peace, as the city was about to be invested by his victorious troops, B.C. 491—B.C. 489. Having leagued with the Æqui, both nations were defeated by the Romans, B.C. 431. The Romans suffered a defeat from them B.C. 407. Camillus routed them and entered their capital, B.C. 388; and again at Satricum he took their camp by storm and captured a great number of prisoners, B.C. 381. A coalition of the Volsei and the Latins was subdued by the Romans B.C. 377. Valerius Corvus defeated them, storming and burning the town of Satricum, B.C. 346. The whole of the Volscian people having submitted to Rome, received the privilege of citizens

VOLSINII, or VULSINII.—The inhabitants of this ancient Etrurian city, who made an incursion into Roman territory during a famine, B.C. 391, were defeated, and lost 5,000 in prisoners, and were finally subjugated by the Romans B.C. 280. The conquerors razed the city, and compelled the remaining inhabitants to migrate to another spot.

VOLTAIC PILE, VOLTAIC ELECTRICITY, or GALVANISM (q.v.), first became a science by Alessandro Volta's publication of the contact theory of galvanism in 1793. The pile was first constructed by Volta in 1800, and has undergoue numerous improvements by Grove, Bunsen, and other men of science.

VOLTERRA (Italy), on the site of Volaterræ, one of the most ancient of the Etruscan cities, offered a brave resistance to the consul L. Scipio B.C. 298. It was afterwards admitted as a dependent ally of Rome, and admitted as a dependent any of Rome, and furnished supplies for the fleet of Scipio in the second Punic war, B.C. 205. It opened its gates to Sylla after a two years blockade, B.C. 38. Upon the fall of the empire, it passed successively under the power of the Vandals and the Lombards. The latter were driven out by Charlemagne in the 8th century. Its palace was constructed in the 10th century. The town-hall, with its museum of Etruscan remains, the most valuable in Italy, was built The cathedral was built about 1208-1257. 1254. The Florentines obtained possession of Volterra in 1361, and a bed of alum discovered near the city was claimed by the Florentine Government in 1472. The citadel was converted into a house of correction in 1818.

VOLTRI (Italy) was occupied by the allied Austrian and Sardinian forces in 1795. A series of combats between them and the French, extending over 15 days, took place in its neighbourhood in April. Both sides suffered severe loss. The French, under Massena, sustained a complete defeat here from the Austrians, commanded by Melas,

VOUGLÉ, or VOUILLÉ.—The battle fought n 507 near Poitiers (g. v.), in which Alaric II. was defeated and slain by Clovis I., is some-times named after this place in the vicinity. VOYAGES .- (See CIRCUMNAVIGATION, &c.)

VRIESLAND.—(See FRIESLAND.) VULCANIÆ INSULÆ.—(See LIPARI

VULGATE, the name given to the Latin translation of the Bible sanctioned by the Romish Church. It was commenced by St. Jerome about 385. The Gospels were completed in 387, and the Old Testament about 405. The first printed edition of the Vulgate was that of Gutenberg, published at Mcntz in 1462; and an attempt to restore the text to the state in which it was left by Jerome was made by Robert Stephens in 1528. The Council of Robert Stephens in 1528. The Council of Trent declared the Vulgate authentic, April 8, 1546, and in 1589 an edition was printed at the Vatican, and sanctioned by a bull of Pope Sixtus V. This edition was superseded by another, printed by order of Clement VIII. in 1592; and this is the version still used by Roman Catholics. The first English edition was printed at Rouen in 1635.

VULTURNUM.—The Romans built a fortress during the Second Punic War (B.C. 218— B.C. 202), at the mouth of the river Vulturnus, and established a magazine of eorn for the use of the army engaged in the siege of Capua B.C. 213. It received a colony of Roman citizens B.C. 194, and again under Augustus (B.C. 27— A.D. 14). The town was destroyed by the Saracens in the 9th century, and another fortress was built near its site in the 17th century.

WAAL (Holland) .- The French, who drove in the advanced posts of the English army on the banks of this river, Oct. 19, 1794, were themselves defeated by the English and Dutch towards the end of the same month. The river was crossed by the French on the ice, to make a winter campaign in Holland. Dec. 10, and they were driven back by the English and the Dutch Dec. 30. A skirmish between the English, under Sir Arthur Wellesley, and the French, took place here Jan. 15.

WACHAU, or WACKAU (Battle). — Some severe encounters took place the second day of the battle of Leipsic (q. v.), Oct. 18, 1813, at this village, near Leipsic.

WACHTENDONK.—(See Bomb.)

WADHAM COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded by Nicholas Wadham and Dorothy his wife, in 1613, for a warden, 15 fellows, 15 scholars, 2 chaplains, and 2 clerks. Dr. Humphrey Hody founded 10 exhibitions—four for the study of Hebrew, and six for the study of Greek—in 1706. Richard Warner bequeathed an exhibition for the study of botany in 1775. John Goodridge left lands, &c., to the value of £60 a year to the college, Nov. 25, 1654; and Lord Wyndham bequeathed £2,000 in 1745. The Rev. John Wills, in 1806, bequeathed £90 a year for a law exhibition to a fellow, £18 a year for a law exhibition to a scholar, £90 a year for a medical exhibition to a fellow, and £18 a year for a medical exhibition to a scholar, besides bequests to a fund for the purchase of livings. The chapel was consecrated April 29, 1613. The altar was paved with black and white marble in 1677, and the rest of the chapel in 1678. An additional building was erected on the south side of the college in WADY MUSA.—(See PETRA.)

WAFER .- The bread used in the Eucharist by the Lutherans and the Roman Catholics, called a wafer, in the shape of a denarius, or penny, to represent, according to some, the money for which Jesus was betrayed, was first introduced in the 11th century. Bernoldus, in his "De Ordine Romano," written in 1089, condemns the substitution of the wafer for bread.

WAFERS .- The oldest seal with red wafers, according to Beckmann, is dated 1624. A writer in Notes and Queries (ix. 410) mentions a letter, dated April, 1607, in his possession, sealed with a red wafer. Wafers were only used by private persons in the 17th century. Their use on public seals commenced in the 18th century

WAGER OF BATTEL. - The decision of suits by Wager of Battel, vadiatio duelli, is said to have originated with the Burgundi, and the first written injunction of judiciary combats is found in the laws of Gundebald in Kerr (Student's Blackstone, Appendix) says, "This trial was introduced into England. among other Norman customs, by William the Conqueror; but was only used in three cases, one military, one criminal, and the third civil. The first in the court of chivalry and honour; the second in appeals of fclony; and the third upon issue joined in a writ of right, formerly the last and most solemn decision of real property." It was the only decision of a writ of right after the Conquest, till Henry II. of right after the Conquest, thi Henry in, (1154-86) established the grand assize, giving the tenant the right of choosing one of the two. Kerr adds, "The last trial by battel that was waged in the court of common pleas at Westminster (though there was afterwards one in the court of chivalry in 1631, and another in the county palatine of Durham in 1638) was in the thirteenth year of Queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1571, as reported by Sir James Dyer, and was held in Tothill Fields, Westminster, 'non sine magna juris consultorum perturbatione,' saith Sir Henry Spelman, who was himself a witness of the ceremony."

WAGER OF LAW.—(See Jury.)

WAGES.—The earliest attempts to regulate the price of labour in this country arose in consequence of the depopulation occasioned, in 1346, and the following years, by the plague, which reduced the number of the working class to such an extent that the supply of labour proved inadequate to the demand, and an immediate rise of wages was demand, and an immediate rise of wages was the result. The Statute of Labourers, 25 Edw. III. st. 1. (1350), limited the rate. (See LABOURERS, &c.) Further regulations were timposed by 13 Rich. II. c. 8 (1380), by 23 Hen. VI. c. 12 (1444), and by 11 Hen. VII. c. 22 (1496). These statutes were amended by 5 Eliz. c. 4 (1562), and by 1 James I. c. 6 (1604), which entrusted the decision of disputes respecting wages to justice, shortly mayors &c. This wages to justices, sheriffs, mayors, &c. This jurisdiction was abolished by 53 Geo. III. c. 40 (April 15, 1813). By 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 37 (Oct. 15, 1831), numerous statutes prohibiting the payment of wages in goods were repealed, the payment of wages in goods were repeated, and by 12 & 13 Vict. c. rof (Aug. 1, 1849), clerks and servants of bankrupts are entitled to at least one quarter's wages in full, provided the amount does not exceed £30. The following table, from Tooke's "History of Prices," vi. 389, shows the average daily wages of agricultural labourers in England during certain periods :-

WAGGONS. - Pharaoh sent waggons to convey Jacob and his family from Canaan to Egypt, B.C. 1706 (Gen. xlv. 19), and some rude vehicle existed among all the nations of an-tiquity, and was employed for agricultural purposes during the Middle Ages. Long waggons, for the conveyance of passengers and goods from London to some of the principal provincial towns, were started in 1605, but did not meet with much success. They were sup-planted by waggon-coaches, which continued to be the chief means of conveyance until the establishment of stage-coaches (q. v.).

WAGRAM (Battle), fought at this village, near Vienna, between the French, under Napoleon I., and the Austrians, under the Archduke Charles, July 5 and 6, 1809. Nearly 1,000 large guns were used in this conflict. which, indecisive on the first day, resulted in a victory for the French. The losses on both sides were very great, and the armistice of Znaim was signed July 11. It led to the peace of Schönbrum (q. v.), and the marriage of Napoleon I. with the Archduchess Maria Louisa.

WAHABEES, or WAHABITES, a Mohammedan reforming sect, originated by Abd el Wahab, in Yemen, about 1749. They made a successful campaign against Ghaleb, the Grand Sheik of Mecca, in 1792 and 1793; repelled an attack by Soliman, Pasha of Bagdad, in 1797 and 1793; and totally destroyed a Turkish army sent against them in 1801. They took Mecca and Medina in 1803, conquered the greater part of Arabia, and overran Syria. Mehemet Ali sent an army against them, which they de-feated near Medina, in 1812; but he took that town soon after. The Wahabees, defeated at Zohran, were victorious at Brissel, in 1815, when peace was concluded. Ibrahim Pasha made war upon them in 1816, and after an obstinate resistance, drove them into Derayeh in 1818, which he took in Dec., and sent Abdullah, their chief, and several of his family, to Constantinople, where they were beheaded. The greater part of the territories conquered by the Wahabees fell under the authority of the Pasha of Egypt; but they gave much trouble, by fomenting insurrections, in 1827,

WAHLSTATT (Battles).— This Prussian village, near Licgnitz, was the scene of a great victory gained by the Duke of Silesia, over the Mongol Tartars, in 1241. — Marshal Blucher defeated the French at the same place, Aug. 26, 1813, and received, in consequence, the title of Prince of Wahlstatt. The latter conflict is frequently called the battle of Katzbach (q. v.), from a small stream that runs through the plain in which it was fought.

WAIAPU (New Zealand).—A bishopric in connection with the Church of England was established here in 1859.
WAIKATOES.—(See New Zealand.)

WAISTCOAT.—This term originally signified an under-garment, reaching to the waist. It afterwards became the principal male garment, and superseded the doublet; but in the 17th and supersected the doublet; but in the 17th century it resumed its original form. Pepys, in 1663, mentions seeing the queen "in a white laced waistcoat." During the reign of Charles II. (1660–85), gentlemen wore waist-coats reaching to the knees, and this fashion continued till about 1772, when the members of the Meansyi (Mill. 1878), introduced short of the Macaroni Club (q. v.) introduced short waistcoats.

WAITCHING, - (See PEKIN.) WAITS, or WAKES .- In former times each ward in the city of London had its company of Waits, who attended the Lord Mayor on public occasions, and whose performances were not restricted to Christmas-tide, as at present. There were companies of Waits in all the principal towns, one having been established at Exeter as early as 1400; and they enjoyed certain privileges.

WAITZEN (Hungary).—The Hungarian insurgents took this town by storm, April 9, 1849, and repulsed the Russians with great slaughter July 15. They were defeated, July 16, by the Russians, who entered the town.

WAKE. — The name given in the Middle Ages to a festival kept on the day of the dedication of a parish church, because the people watched from the previous night till morning in the church, was afterwards applied to any holiday in the county. (See FAIRS.) Wakes were regulated by an act of convention in 1536; were suppressed at Exeter and in Somersetshire in 1627 and in 1631; and though temporarily restored by the Book of Sports, Oct. 18, 1633, gradually declined.

WAKEFIELD (Battles).—A sanguinary battle was fought at Wakefield, Dec. 30, 1460, between the Lancastrians and the Yorkists, in which the latter were defeated, and Richard, Duke of York, father of Edward IV., was slain.—The Royalists were defeated here by

The parish church of All Saints was built in the parish charles of Am Saints was built in the reign of Henry III. (1216—72). The font bears the initials of Charles II., and the date is 1611. The bridge was built in the reign of Edward III. (1327—77). The free grammar-school was founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1592. The Green-coat school was established in 1707. The church of St. John, built in 1705, was made parochial in 1815. The Court-house was erected in 1806, a cornexchange in 1823, and a more commodious building in 1837. The Literary and Philosobuilding in 1837. The Literary and Philosophical Society was founded in 1827; the Proprietary school was opened in 1834; and Trinity church was built in 1840. The town was incorporated in 1847. A motion in the House of Commons, for making it a separate assize town for the West Riding of Yorkshire instead of Leeds, was rejected Feb. 19, 1864. An Art Exhibition was held here Aug. 30, 1865. WALCHEREN EXPEDITION.—This expedition, for checking the growing influence of Napoleon I. in Holland, consisted of 30,000 men, under the command of Lord Chatham, brother of Mr. Pitt. Lord Chatham received his instructions July 16, 1809. The expedition, consisting of a fleet of 37 ships of the line and 23 frigates, besides numerous smaller vessels, under the command of Sir Richard Strahan, left England July 28, 1809, and commenced the disembarkation in Walcheren, the principal island of the Dutch province of Zealand, and at Cadsand, July 29. Middleburg, the chief town of the island, and Goes, the capital of South Beveland, were immediately occupied, and Balitz, evacuated by the French Aug. 2, was seized Aug. 3. Instead of proceeding to capture Antwerp, the grand object of the expedition, Lord Chatham invested Flushing (q. v.), which surrendered, after a vigorous bombardment, Aug. 16. In the meantime, the French forces, no longer required in Germany, on account of the peace with Austria, had assembled around Antwerp, and as the marsh fever of the Low Countries began to appear among the English troops, it was decided, in the beginning of Sep., to withdraw into the island of Walcheren. As the mortality continued on the increase, orders were issued for the evacuation of the island, Nov. 23; and before Christmas the entire force had re-embarked. The total number of deaths during the occupation amounted to 7,000, and the sick sent home at various times to 12,863. Considerable indignation having been felt at the failure of the expedition, a select committee of inquiry was nominated by the House of Commons, Feb. 6, 1810. After an adjourned debate, four divisions took place, March 30, and in all of these ministers had a majority. In the first Lord Porchester's resolution was rejected by a majority of 48 (for, 227; against, 275); in the second Gen. Crawford's first resolution was carried by a majority of 40 (for, 272; against, 232); in the third an amendment by Mr. Canning was carried by a majority of 51 (for, 275; against, 224); and in the fourth Gen. Crawford's last resolution, expressing approval of the conduct of ministers, was carried by a majority of 23 (for, 255; against, 232).

WALDECK (Germany). — This small principality was created in 1682. Its first prince was George Frederick (1620—1692), a celebrated imperial general. Prince Christian Augustus, born in 1744, signalized himself in the wars against the French during the Revo lution, and is said to have originated the plan of the successful attack on the French lines of Weissenburg, in Alsace, Oct. 13, 1793. The Prince of Waldeck granted a constitution to his subjects in Aug., 1852. It seceded from the Germanic Confederation June 25, 1866, and passed under the rule of Prussia by a treaty ratified Sep. 8. WALDENSES.—(See VALDENSES.)

WALES, the ancient Cambria, or Britannia Septentrionalis, or Secunda, was a distinct principality before the invasion of Britain by Julius Cæsar, B.C. 55, and maintained its independence throughout the Roman, Saxon, and Danish invasions. The modern Welsh are said to be descendants of the ancient Britons, who fled to the fastnesses of Wales in order to escape from the Saxon tyrants.

WALHALLA, or VALHALLA.—This edifice, which derives its name from the Hall of Woden, the paradise of the Scandinavian mythology, was built by Louis Charles, King of Bavaria, upon a hill on the north bank of the Danube, near Ratisbon, for the reception of the statues and memorials of the great men of Germany. It was commenced Oct. 18, 1830, and finished and inaugurated Oct. 18, 1842.

WALK (Battle). - The Russians were defeated by the Swedes at this town in Russia,

June 19, 1657. WALLACHIA (Europe) formed part of Dacia, when it was conquered and colonized by the Emperor Trajan, in 106. The Wallachians are supposed by some to be the descendants of these colonists. They were, however, recalled from Dacia when that kingdom was eeded to the Goths by the Emperor Aurelian, in 270. This name belonged to some people in tarians in 1646, and the castle was completely demolished in 1653. Wallingford received its century, a portion of whom settled north of first charter in the reign of Henry L (100—35), the Danube in the 12th century. The inhabitants of Dacia were nearly exterminated by the Mongols in the 13th century; and, after they had withdrawn, the Wallachians and other foreign colonists settled there, and were governed by their own princes, who were called waiwodes, voyades or hospodars, or despots. The kings of Hungary compelled them to pay tribute in the 14th century. The Hungarians exacted tribute in 1390. Turks assailed them in 1391 and 1394, devastated the whole country in 1415, and obliged them to pay an annual tribute. Mohammed II, led an army into Wallachia in 1462. They put themselves under the protection of the Emperor in 1608, but were again resigned to Turkish dominion by the treaty of Carlowitz, Jan. 26, 1699. The country suffered from civil war and the plague in the beginning of the 17th century, and the western part was ceded to the Emperor by the treaty of Passarowitz, to the Emperor by the treaty of Passarowitz, July 21, 1718; he lostit again in 1739. Turkey covenanted with Russia not to remove the voyade or hospodar for the space of seven years, by the treaty of Jassy, Jan. 9, 1792; and further stipulated not to do so without the consent of Russia, Sep. 24, 1802. Through French influence, the Sulfan deposed the wai-wode, without the knowledge of Russia, Aug. 30, 1807, and, in consequence, a Russian army entered Wallachia, defeated the Turks, and occupied Bucharest. in Dec. 1807. They reoccupied Bucharest, in Dec., 1807. They remained in the country until it was formally annexed to Russia by an imperial ukase, Jan. 21, 1810. It was restored to Turkey by the peace of Bucharest, May 28, 1812. A rebellion broke out in Wallachia in 1821. The princi-palities of Wallachia and Moldavia were united (See Danubian Principalities), with the privi-lege of self-government, under the suzerainty of the Sultan, by a convention signed by the principal European powers at Paris, Aug. 19, 1838. Col. Alexander John Couza was ap-pointed hospodar by the electoral assembly, Feb. 5, 1850. By a proclamation made at Jassy and Bueharest Dec. 23, 1861, the principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia were declared united into one state under the title of Roumania, or Rumania (q. v.)

WALLER'S PLOT, contrived by Edmund Waller, the poet, to deliver London into the power of Charles I., was discovered May 31, 1643. His principal confederates, Tomkins, his brother-in-law, and Chaloner, a wealthy citizen, were hanged, July 5, 1643. Waller, who escaped with banishment and a fine of

WALLINGFORD (Berkshire), supposed to have existed in the time of the Romans, was taken and burned by the Danes in 1006. In Domesday Book it is called Walingeford, and is described as a borough with 276 houses. William I. received the homage of Archbishop Stigand and the principal nobles here in 1066. A strong castle was built in 1067, which was held for the Empress Maud in the civil war with Stephen, who unsuccessfully besieged it several times. It was taken by the Parliament from 1294 till 1832, when it was deprived of one. A Benedictine priory, founded here in the reign of William I., was suppressed in 1535. St. Leonard's church, much damaged in the siege of 1646, was afterwards rebuilt. St. Peter's, also ruined in the same siege, was rebuilt in 1769; and the tower was erected in 1777. The free school was founded in 1659, 1777. The free school was rotated in 1859, the almshouses in 1681, and a school for 20 boys and 30 gtrls was established in 1819.

WALLIS'S VOYAGE.—Capt. Wallis sailed from Plymouth in the Dolphin, Aug. 22, 1766; visited Tahiti, which he named King George's Island, June 19, 1767; reached Batavia Nov. 30, the Cape of Good Hope Feb. 4, 1768, and returned to the Downs May 20, 1768; having accomplished the circumnavigation of the globe in one year and nine months.

WALLS.—The great wall in Egypt, to prevent the incursions of the Syrians and Arabians, was built by Sesostris. The ancient cities of Greece were surrounded by massive walls in the time of Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927). The great wall of China was completed about B.C. Jura, B.C. 58; and the long wall of Constan-

Jura, B.C. 58; and the long wait of Constantinople in 507. (See Agricola's Wall, Hadrian's Wall, Roman Walls, &c.)
WALMER CASTLE (Kent) was erected by Henry VIII. for the defence of the coast in 1539. The Duke of Wellington died here Sep. 14, 1852. WALNUT-TREE was cultivated in Europe by the Romans, B.C. 37. The common walnut was brought from France in 1562, and the black walnut-tree was introduced into England from

N. America before 1629.

MAN ADMINISTRATION.) --- Walpole's second administration, formed April 4, 1721, on the dissolution of the Sunderland administration, was thus constituted :-

Lord Parker, created Earl of Macclesfield, resigned the lord-chancellorship Jan. 4, 1725, and his office was filled by Lord King, June 1. He resigned in Nov., 1733, and was succeeded, Nov. 29, by Lord Talbot, who died Feb. 14, 1737; and Lord Hardwicke was appointed Feb. 21. The Duke of Devonshire, who succeeded Lord Carleton as president of the council, March 27, Carleton as president of the council, March 27, 1725, was followed by Lord Trevor, May 8, 1730, and he was succeeded by the Earl of Wilmington, Dec. 31, 1730. Lord Trevor became privy seal March 11, 1726, and was succeeded by the Earl of Wilmington May 8, 1730. The Duke of Devonshire took the office June 12, 1731; Viscount Lonsdale May 5, 1733; the Earl of Godolphin in May, 1735; and Lord Hervey, April 7, 1740. Lord Carteret was succeeded as one of the principal secretaries of state by the Duke of Newcastle, April 14, 1724; and Viscount Townshend was replaced by Lord Harrington, June 27, 1730. The Earl of Berkeley was succeeded at the Admiralby, Aug. 2, 1727, by Viscount Torrington, who was succeeded by Sir Charles Wager, Jan. 25, 1733. The office of secretary at war was filled by Mr. Henry Pelham, from April 1, 1724; by Sir W. Strickland, Bart., from Jan. 11, 1730; and by Sir W. Yonge, Bart., from May 9, 1735. The Earl of Cadogan succeeded the Duke of Marlborough at the Ordnance, July 1, 1722. He was re-1730. The Duke of Devonshire took the office at the Ordnance, July 1, 1722. He was replaced by the Duke of Argyle July 1, 1725; and the Duke of Montagu took the office July 1, 1740. Sir Robert Walpole resigned Feb. 3, 1742, and was created Earl of Orford Feb. 6. (See WILMINGTON ADMINISTRATION.)

WALTHAM ABBEY, or HOLY CROSS (Essex), originally founded in the reign of Canute, derives its name from the celebrated Canute, derives its name from the celebrated abbey founded by Harold, son of Earl Godwin, in 1662. This abbey, of which a few remains are left, had a yearly revenue of £1,079 128. 18. when it was surrendered to Henry VIII., March 23, 1540. The church, formerly the nave of the church of the monastery, has an embattled tower bearing the date of 1558. The Government gunpowder-mills were established of Welthern Albert in 282. Explosions lished at Waltham Abbey in 1787. Explosions occurred April 25, 1801, with a loss of nine lives; Jan. 16, 1810, with a loss of six lives; Nov. 27, 1811, with a loss of seven lives; April 13, 1843, with a loss of seven lives; April 27, 1861, by which one man lost his life, and several received groups in juries.

WARBECK'S INSURRECTION.—Piers or Perklin Warbuck soil of how years the son of

Perkin Warbeck, said to have been the son of John Osbeck, or Olbeck, a converted Jew of Tournay, was a godson of Edward IV., and a young man of great personal attractions and good manners. He was instructed by Margaret, dowager Duchess of Burgundy, and sister of Edward IV., to pass himself off as the young Duke of York, who was supposed to have been nurdered in the Tower by Richard III. She first sent him to Portugal, where he remained for a year; but on the commencement of war between France and England, in 1492, she despatched him to Ireland, where he was received with welcome by the inhabitants of Cork. Charles VIII. of France next invited him to his court, and received him as the young duke and the rightful heir to the English crown; but when peace became probable he dismissed him, Nov. 3. Perkin repaired to Flanders, where his cause was openly espoused by the dowager Margaret, who acknowledged him as her nephew, and gave him the cognomen of the White Rose of England. Intelligence of these events reached England early in 1493, and was carely eagerly believed by many who were discontented with the government of Henry VII. A conspiracy in favour of Perkin was formed by the Lord Chamberlain, Sir William Stanley,

Sir Robert Clifford, and others. Henry VII. sent spies into Flanders, who obtained a knowledge of Warbeck's antecedents, and by dint of bribes he induced Clifford to betray his companions and to reveal all he knew of the conspiracy. Sir Simon Mountford, Sir Thomas Thwaites, and Robert Ratcliff were immediately executed; but the others received immediately executed; but the others received a commutation of sentence. Sir William Stanley was executed Feb. 16, 1495. Warbeck, who attempted to land at Deal July 3, 1495, was repulsed, and 169 of his adherents, made prisoners, were hanged by order of the king. Having subsequently besieged Waterford, in Ireland, he was compelled to flee by Sir Edward Poynings, July 23. After this failure he again retired to Flanders, where he remained till March, 1406, when he he remained till March, 1496, when he visited Scotland, and was favourably received by James IV., who gave him in marriage his kinswoman, the Lady Catherine Gordon, and invaded the northern counties of England in his behalf. A war breaking out in consequence between the two countries, Warbeck was obliged to retire to Ireland July 26, 1497, and subsequently to Whitsand Bay, Cornwall, where he landed Sep. 7, and was placed at the head of a large body of Cornish rebels. (See EXETER.) He retired to Taunton Sep. 20. Having been apprised of the approach of Lord Daubeney with a numerous army, he fled during the night to the sanctuary of Beaulieu, in Hampshire, Sep. 21. His wife, Lady Catherine Gordon, fell into the hands of the Royal troops, and became an attendant on the queen. Warbeck surrendered to Henry VII. Oct. 5, and was led in triumph through London Nov. 27. He was kept prisoner in the royal palace, and afterwards in the Tower, whence he escaped June 8, 1498, and took, shelter with the prior of Shene. He again surrendered on the promise that his life should be spared, and was exhibited in the stocks at Westminster Hall, June 14, and the following day in Cheapside; after which he was once more removed to the Tower. Here he formed an intimacy with his fellow-prisoner, the young Earl of Warwick, son of George, buke of Clarence, with whom he planned an escape and a renewal of his claims. The attempt failed, Aug. 2, 1499, and Warbeck was tried at Westminster Hall Nov. 16, and hanged Nov. 23. Warwick was tried Nov. 21, and executed Nov. 28. The account of Perkin Piers or Peter) Warbeck's parentage is derived from his enemies. By some authorities he is believed to have been, if not Richard, Duke of York, at any rate a son of Edward IV.

WARBURG (Battle).—The French were defeated by the English and their allies, under the Prince of Brunswick, at this town, in Westphalia, Aug. 7, 1760.

WARDS AND LIVERIES (Court of).—This court, erected by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46 (1540), was abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660).

WAREHAM (Dorsetshire) existed in the time of the Britons, and, subsequently occupied by the Romans, was taken in 800 by the Danes, when the inhabitants were massacred, and the town was reduced to ruins in 876. It was again ravaged by them in 998. The castle and town were seized for the Empress Maud in 1138, and were retaken and burned by Stephen. The town, almost destroyed by fire in 1762, was completely rebuilt within two years. A priory was founded here in the 9th century.
WAR OFFICE.—The department of the Sccretary of War was established in 1666, for the management of the finance business of the army. The Secretary of State for War was made a distinct office during the Russian War, and the announcement of the change was made in the House of Lords June 9, 1854. The office of Secretary at War was abolished, and its duties transferred to the Secretary of State for War, by 26 Vict. c. 12 (May 4, 1863).

WARRANTS.—(See GENERAL WARRANTS.)
WARRINGTON (Lancashire) is supposed to have been a Roman station in 79. After its occupation by the Saxons it obtained the name of Werington, from the Saxon wering, a fortification, and tun, a town, from which its present name is derived. It was besieged and taken by the Parliamentarians in May or June, 1643. Gen. Lambert defeated the Scots here in 1648, and Charles II. repulsed the Parliamentarians in 1651. The bridge was cut down to intercept the passage of the Jacobite army under Charles Edward, and part of the rebel force captured it in 1745. The Duke of Cumberland passed through the town in his march to the north in 1746. A wooden bridge, erected in the end of the 14th century, was replaced by a bridge of stone by Thomas, first Earl of Derby, in compliment to Henry VII., on his visit to Latham and Knowsley, in 1496. A new bridge of wood on stone piers was erected in 1812. The parish church of St. Helen's is of Saxon origin, and existed at the time of the Conquest. The tower was rebuilt in 1696. The free grammarschool was founded in 1526; the Blue-coat school in 1677; the subscription library was established in 1758, the dispensary in 1810, and a building was erected for it in 1818. The town-hall was built in 1820.

WARSAW (Battles).—The Poles were defeated here by the Swedes in a battle which lasted three days, in 1656. The Russian and Prussian troops were beaten by the Polish and Frussian troops were beaten by the Polish guards and the populace in the town, April 17, 1794. The Poles under Kosciusko were defeated by the Russians, Oct. 4, 1794, and again with a loss of 10,000 slain, and 9,000 in prisoners, at Praga, near Warsaw, Nov. 4, 1794.—In the battle between the Poles and the Russians at the village of Grochow, near Warsaw, Esh. 10, 2019, 1819, 1919 victorious; and in the contest at the suburb of Praga, Feb. 24 and 25, 1831, the result was indecisive.—The Poles, who gained a victory over the Russians at Warsaw, March 31, 1831, were defeated by them here in a great battle

WARSAW (Poland), the principal city of Russian Poland, became the capital of Poland in 1609; was taken by the Swedes in the middle of the 17th century, and was retaken by the Poles in 1656; but before the end of the year the Swedes wrested it from them, and destroyed the fortifications. It was taken by Charles XII. in 1703. The Poles rose against the Russians and expelled them April 171704. The Prussians assailed it unsuccessfully in July and Aug., and it was taken by the Russians with great slaughter, Nov. 9, 1794. The Russians retired Nov. 28, 1806, and it was occupied by the French Nov. 30. Napoleon I. arrived Dec. 18, 1806, and received embassies from Turkey and Persia in the beginning of March, 1807. It was captured by the Austrians April 23, 1800, and was retaken by the Poles June 1. Napoleon I. arrived here on his retreat from Russia, Dec. 10, 1812. It was evacuated by the Austrians in the beginning of Feb., 1813, and was occupied by the Russians. A royal palace was built by Sigismund III. (1587—1632). The church of the Holy Cross was erected in 1696, the Lutheran church in 1781, the church of St. Alexander in 1814, and the Dominican church in 1823. The Polish insurrection broke out Nov. 29, 1830, and the Russian grandduke Constantine having retired from the city Nov. 30, a provisional government was formed. The Polish army retreated to Warsaw after the battle of Praga, Feb. 24 and 25, 1831. The prisons were broken into and all the state prisoners, Russian prisoners and others, were nurdered by the mob, Aug. 15 and 16. The Russians captured it after a sanguinary battle, which lasted two days, Sep. 8. A strong citadel was erected by them after the close of the revolution. The university was abolished in 1834, and the library of 150,000 volumes and other valuable collections were removed to St. Petersburg. The Emperors of Austria and Russia, and the King of Prussia, met here Oct. 2, 1853. Alexander II. visited Warsaw Sep. 7, 1857. The Emperors of Austria and of Russia, and the King of Prussia, met here Oct. 22—26, 1860. Disturbances broke out Feb. 25, 1861. The Poles rose against the conscription Jan. 22, 1863. (See POLAND.) An imperial rescript for the establishment of a Russian university was issued Sep. 11, 1864. WARSAW (Treaties).—An alliance between

Sweden and Poland was signed here, Nov. 18, 1705. - A convention relative to the trade of the Polish provinces was concluded at Warsaw, March 22, 1817.——A treaty between Russia and Prussia for the suppression of the insurrection was signed here, Feb. 8, 1863. WARTBURG (Saxe-Weimar).—Luther was conveyed for safety to this castle, near Eisenach, after leaving Worms, April 26, 1521. It was at one time the residence of the landgraves of Thuringia. Luther, under the name of Junker George (Squire George), and pro-Warsaw, Feb. 19 and 20, 1831, the former were tected by the Elector Frederick, spent several months in this retreat, where he commenced the translation of the Bible into German.

WARWICK (Warwickshire), supposed by some to have been a town of importance prior to the Roman invasion, having been destroyed by the Danes, was restored, and a fort creeted by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great, in 913. Queen Elizabeth visited it on her way to 913. Queen Elizabeth visited it on her way to Kenilworth Castle in 1575. More than half the town was destroyed by an accidental fire in 1694, and it was rebuilt by a national contribution, which amounted to £110,000, of which Queen Anne gave £1,000. William III. visited it in 1695. Its earliest charter dates from 1260, but it was not regularly incorporated till 1553. Warwick Castle is supposed to have been founded by Ethelfeda (913), but no authentic trace of the original building reauthernie brace of the original banding ramains. Cessar's Tower, built at least 700 years ago, and Guy's Tower, built in 1394, are both in good preservation. St. Mary's church, which stands on the site of an older structure, was built in the 14th century. Having been nearly destroyed by fire in 1694, it was rebuilt in 1794. The tower, 130 feet high, was designed by Sir Christopher Wren. The Beauchamp chapel was erected in 1464.

WASHINGTON (N. America), surveyed and laid out by three commissioners in 1791, was founded by the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol, Sep. 18, 1793. The seat of the federal government was transferred from Philadelphia to this place in 1800, and the president and the other chief officers of the government have since resided here. It was captured by a small English force under Ross, Aug. 24, 1814, and a proposition to ransom the public to the sum of the sum gress in 1821. The Smithsonian Institute was organized by act of Congress in 1846. A destructive fire, in which part of the Capitol and the whole of the library were destroyed, occurred Dec. 24, 1851. The Prince of Wales visited the President here in Oct., 1860. Pre-sident Lincoln was assassinated in Ford's Theatre, Washington, April 14, 1865. WASHINGTON (Treaties).—Numerous treaties have been signed at this city, the principal, with Great Britain, being one relating to the Oregon Boundary, concluded June 15, 1846, and another, entitled the Reci-

WASSAIL BOWL.—The term wassail is derived from the Anglo-Saxon was-hel, "be in health," and the wassail bowl was compounded of ale, nutmeg, sugar, toast, and roasted crabs or apples, which formed an aggregate, some-times called lamb's wool. The custom of was-sailing on New Year's eve is derived by some antiquaries from the presentation of a loving eup to Vortigern by Rowena, in 499; but others assert, and with greater probability, that it is of earlier origin.

WASTE LANDS were first inclosed in England in order to promote agriculture, in 1547. This eaused an insurrection in various parts of the country in June, July, and Aug., 1549. (See Ket's Insurrection.) Inclosures of commons and waste lands are generally made by local statutes, which are regulated by the General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. III. e. 109 (1800), amended by 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 23 (1821).

WATCH (London) was established in accordance with an order issued by Henry III. in The duty was performed by the eitizens themselves, and they had stately processions yearly. Henry VIII. came into the eity disguised as a veoman of the guard to see this guised as a yeoman or the guard to see that nocturnal pomp, on the eve of St. John, 1510, and was so well pleased that he brought his queen, attended by the principal nobility, into Cheapside to see it on the eve of St. Peter following. The eavaleade of the city watch was abolished, and a stated watch appointed at the charge of each word in the pointed at the charge of each ward, in the summer of 1570. An armed watch of the inhabitants of London during the civil war was appointed by the common council Oct. 2, 1643. The regulation of the city watch was vested in the common council by ro Geo. II. (1736). The watch of London was superseded by the police by 10 Geo IV. c. 44 (June 19, 1829). WATCHERS.—(See Accmetæ.)

vented at Nuremberg, in Germany, towards the end of the 15th century. Robert I., King of Seotland (1306—29), is said to have pos-sessed a watch. The earliest known watch, sessed a waten. The carriest known waten, bearing the date of 1541, was in Sir Ashton Lever's museum. Watehes were common in France before 1544. Henry VIII, is said to have had a wateh; and one, set in an armlet, was presented to Queen Elizabeth in 1572. They were not in general request in England till the end of her reign. The invention of spring watches has been ascribed to Dr. Hooke, and by some to Huyghens, about 1658. The anchor escapement was invented by Clement, a London elockmaker, in 1680, and the horizontal watch by Graham in 1724. Repeaters were invented in the reign of Charles II., and the smallest one of this kind ever known-it was the size of a silver twopenee, and its weight that of a sixpence—was made by Arnold for Geo. III., and was presented to him on his birthday, June 4, 1764. The duties on wrought gold and silver watch-eases were

WATER-COLOURS.—All the ancient modes of painting, such as fresco-painting (q. v.), &c., were systems of water-colour; but the existing mode of water-colour painting did not become a popular branch of art until about the latter part of the 18th century. The Society of Painters in Water-Colours was instituted Nov. 30, 1804, and the New Society in 1832. Both these associations hold annual exhibitions. Paul Sandby (1732—Nov. 0, 1809), Thomas Girtin (1773—1802), Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775—Dec. 19, 1851), and Samuel Prout (1783—Feb. 10, 1852), are regarded as the founders of the art of water-colour painting.

WATER CURE.—(See HYDROPATHY.) WATERFORD (Bishopric) was established 1796, and received the see of Lismore in 1363. The united sees were ordered to be annexed to Cashel by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), and this was effected on the death of Bishop Bourke.

WATERFORD (Ireland), capital of the county of Waterford, is said to have been founded by the Danes about $850. A caused is WATERFORD (Bishopric) was established founded by the Dancs about 850. A council is said to have been held here in 1158. The account of it coincides with that given of a council at Armagh in 1171. Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, took it by assault in 1170. Henry II. landed here on his invasion of Ireland, Oct. 18, 1171. King John granted its first charter, and resided here for some conths. months, in 1210. The citizens, led by the mayor, were defeated by the Poers and O'Driscolls in 1368. Waterford was visited by Richard II. Oct. 2, 1394, and again when he went to redress some disorders consequent on the death of the Earl of March, who had fallen in a skirmish with the natives, June 1, 1399. The motto of the city, "Urbs intacta manet," was bestowed upon it in consequence of having successfully resisted Perkin Warbeck in 1495. It resisted a siege by Cromwell in 1649, and submitted to Ireton in 1650. It sided with James II., who embarked here for France, after the battle of the Boyne, July 1, 1690. Gen. Kirke compelled it to surrender July 25, 1690. Some refugees from Geneva endeavoured to establish a colony in 1783. The cathedral, founded in 1076, has been since altogether rebuilt. The chamber of commerce was incorporated in 1815.

WATER-GAS .- (See GAS.) WATER-GLASS, or OIL OF FLINT .- Stereochromy, or the process of painting with this mixture, which is a soluble alkaline silicate, was invented by Dr. Johann N. Von Fuchs, who published an account of it in 1825. It was employed by Maclise and Herbert, in the frescoes at the new palace of Westminster. In 1840 Professor F. Kuhlmaun, of Lille, directed his attention to the material, with a view to tis employment as a preservative for stone; and in 1859 a translation of a report on its and in 1659 a transition of a report on its application to the fine arts was privately printed by order of Prince Albert. F. Ran-some maintains that Kuhlmann's process is the same as his own inventions for preserving stone, and claims the merit of priority. (See borough forced the French lines near Tirlemont, July 18, 1705, and Marshal Villeroy retired in haste. The French army then took post in the neighbourhood of Waterloo, their line extending from Overische, near Soignies, to Neerische, so as to cover Brussels and Louvain. Marlborough drew up his army in order of Marlborough drew up his army in order of battle before the enemy, Aug. 18, but the Dutch refused to allow their troops to act, and this opportunity of defeating the French before they had recevered from their panic was lost.—The great battle which secured the final defeat of Napoleon I. commenced near Waterloo, in Belgium, at half-past 11 o'clock in the morning, Sunday June 18, 1815, by an attack of the French, under Prince Jerome, upon the Castle of Hausenment, which was set on fire Castle of Hougoumont, which was set on fire about two o'clock. The French cavalry, under Ney, was repeatedly driven back by the English infantry, but the farm of La Haye Sainte was compelled to surrender, owing to the scanty ammunition of its brave defenders. Late in the afternoon, Marshal Blucher arrived with the Prussian army, and attacked the French right flank. The grand attack of the Imperial Guard commenced at a quarter past seven, and was defeated by the English foot-guards, under Major-Gen. Maitland. Just as the sun sank below the horizon, Wellington gave the order for the whole of the English line to advance, which occasioned a panic and general flight in the French army. The Old Guard, which at first stood firm, yielded to the attack of Adam's brigade and the Osnaburg battalion of Col. Halket; and at half-past eight the Duke of Wellington relinquished the pursuit and returned to the village of Waterloo. At the village of Genappe he met Blucher, who continued the pursuit. The following table, taken from Capt. Siborne's history of the Waterloo campaign, shows the effective force of the Allied army in this memorable force of the Allied army in this memorable battle:-

Total	49,608	12,408	5,645	67,661	156

The Dutch-Belgian forces acted with great lukewarmness, and were of but slight service during the battle. The Prussian forces engaged amounted to 41,283 infantry, 8,838 cavalry, and 1,803 artillery, making a total of 51,944 men, with 104 guns. The effective French army consisted of 47,579 infantry, 13,792 cavalry, and 7,529 artillery, forming a force of 68,900 men, with 246 guns. The following table shows the English loss :-

Officers Men	85 1,334	10 582	365 4,564	460 6,480
Total	1,419	592	4,929	6,940

Among the killed were Gens. Sir William Ponsonby and Sir Thomas Pieton, who fell pierced by a musket-ball at the beginning of the battle. Lord Uxbridge, afterwards Earl of Uxbridge and Marquis of Anglesey (1768— April 29, 1854), and Lord Fitzroy Somerset, afterwards Lord Raglan (1783—June 28, 1855), were both severely wounded. The total loss of the Allies exceeded $2,000 men; and the French are said to have lost no less than 40,000 men. The battle was called by the Prussians the battle of La Belle Alliance, and by the French the battle of Mont St. Jean. It has received its English name from the adjoining village of Waterloo, where the Duke of Wellington fixed his head-quarters, and reposed after the fatigues of the day.

WATERLOO BRIDGE (London).—The first stone was laid Oct. 11, 1811, and the bridge was opened to the public June 18, 1817. It was built by John Rennie, at a cost of upwards of a million sterling. The toll for foot passengers was reduced from a penny to a halfpenny, Feb. 29, 1841. A committee of the-House of Commons was appointed to consider the expediency of abolishing the toll, April

WATERSPOUT.—These remarkable meteorological phenomena are regarded as belonging to the same class as the moving sand-pillars of the desert, but their cause and nature are imperfectly understood. One burst in Laneashire in 1718, and caused considerable damage. Another, at Brackenthwaite, in Cumberland, Sep. 9, 1760, tore away the gravel and soil from a field. A great waterspout descended upon Dungavell Hill, in Scotland, July 2, 1768, and made an opening about 24 yards broad and three feet deep. A similar phenomenon occurred at Clapham Common, during a vio-lent thunderstorm, June 18, 1782; and at Ramsgate, where it flooded several cellars to the depth of four feet, July 14, 1793. One burst over the Wheal Abraham and Creuve mines, in Cornwall, in Nov., 1806, and choked up the shaft, causing the death of several miners and considerable destruction of property. Another, consisting of a torrent of water nearly six feet in diameter, descended upon the town of Silkstone, in Yorkshire, May 9, 1807, and several of the inhabitants were drowned. The appearance of the temporary island Sabrina, in the Azores, Jan. 12, 1811, was attended with numerous waterspouts and volcanie phenomena. A waterspout of very destructive character overwhelmed the very destructive character overwheimed the village of Kingseourt, county Cavan, Ireland, Sep. 12, 1838; and much injury was occasioned in Provence, France, by one, May 30, 1841. A ship struck by one near Gozo, Oct. 14, 1850, foundered, and all on board perished, with the exception of one man. The island of Sielly was visited by two waterspouts, attended by hurricare the of Sec. 18 the research was a hurricane, Dec. 8, 1851. Five vessels were sunk in Tunis harbour by a waterspout, Nov. 18, 1855. Major Sherwill made numerous observations on watersports in India, where they are frequent. One which fell at Dum-Dun, near Calcutta, Oct. 7, r859, measured 1,500 feet in height, and covered half a square mile with about six inches of water.

WATER TOFANA, or AQUA TOFANA, so named from its inventor, Tofana, the secret poisoner, an Italian woman, who resided at Palermo, and afterwards at Naples, about the niddle of the 17th century. Many husbands died suddenly at Rome in 1569, and suspicion having been excited, a society of young wives was discovered. An old woman named Spara was the president, and she supplied them with small phials, bearing the inscription "Manna of St. Nicholas of Barri," by the use of which husbands were removed. Spara and four others were executed; and Tofana, who manufactured the poison, was dragged from a monastery where she had taken sanctuary, and put to the torture. She confessed to having been instrumental in the deaths of 600 persons.

WATIER'S CLUB (London).-This celebrated elub, at which the favourite game was Macao, established in 1807, was dissolved in 1819. WATLING STREET.—(See ROADS.)

WATTIGNIES Battle), fought at this village in the neighbourhood of Maubeuge, between the Austrians, under the Prince of Coburg, and the French, commanded by Gen. Jourdan, commenced in an affair between the outposts near Avesnes, Oct. 14, 1793. It resulted in the triumph of the republican army, after a loss on each side of about 3,000 inen, Oct. 16.— The French defeated the outposts of the Austrian army here, April 21, 1794. WAT TYLER'S INSURRECTION.—One of the collectors of the poll or capitation tax, imposed by the Parliament held at North-ampton, Nov. 5, 1380, who had insulted the daughter of a man called Wat the Tyler, at daugnter of a man caused wat the Tyler, at Deptford, was killed by her father on the spot, early in June, 1,31. A rising ensued, and the insurgents met on Blackheath, June 12. They proceeded to London, burned the Duke of Lancaster's palace, and committed many atroctices, June 13. The Tower was seized; the Archbishop of Canterbury and Sir Robert Hales were excented by them. They Hales were executed by them, June 14. They destroyed the Savoy palace, the Archbishop of Canterbury's palace, and the priory of St. John's, Clerkenwell. Some of the authorities met them in Smithfield, June 15, and whilst they were parleying with Richard II., their leader, Wat, was killed by William Walworth, the lord mayor. A body of armed men, under Sir Robert Knollys, suddenly attacked the malcontents, who were quickly dispersed. WAVE-LINE PRINCIPLE.—The system of building ships with contours scientifically adapted to the curves of the waves of the sea was originated by Scott Russell, who com-menced a series of experiments on the subject in 1834. His theory attracted considerable attention, and in 1836 the British Association appointed a Committee on Waves, who presented their first report in 1837, and continued their labours for several years. The victory of the United States schooner America over Mr. R. Stephenson's iron yacht Titania, in the race of Aug. 28, 1851, established the superiority of the principle, which has since been applied in the Great Eastern and other vessels.

WAVERLEY (Surrey) .- The first Cistercian abbey erected in England was founded at this place near Farnham, by Dr. Gifford, Bishop of Winchester, in 1128. The church was conse-crated by Nicholas of Ely, Bishop of Win-

The battle lasted from four o'clock till midnight, and was renewed by Thielmann, June 10, Grouchy received orders to retire upon Namur, which he reached June 20

WAWZ, or WAWER (Battle).—The advanced guard of the Russians, under Gen. Geismar, was attacked at this place, in Poland, by the Poles, and forced to fall back upon Dembe-Wielkie. Here the Poles routed them, after fighting from five in the afternoon till ten at night, March 31, 1831. WAX .- The ancients used wax for torches, for covering the tablets on which they wrote, for encaustic painting, for sealing, and for modelling. Pliny (23—79) states it was customary for the wealthy Romans to preserve waxen effigies of their dead relatives, which were exhibited on occasions of great interest, and were borne in procession in the funerals of distinguished members of their family. Apuleius, writing in the 2nd century, mentions wax candles. The Wax Chandlers' company of London was incorporated in 1484. Sealing-wax, or Spanish wax, has been found on documents dated 1574 and 1620. Gaetano Giulio Zumbo (1656—1701) introduced the art of preparing anatomical models in wax. The wax-tree was imported into England from China in 1794. A new kind of wax-producing insect was described in 1857 as inhabiting China, where its wax is used for candles, which are said to be much superior to ordinary wax tapers. Provisions for the regulation of wax tapers. From the regulation of the regulation of the wax-frade were made by 11 Hen, VI. c. 12 (1433), and by 23 Eliz, c. 8 (1581). The duties on imported wax were repealed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 12 (May 8, 1845).

all probability weaving was practised before spinning; that is, the combination of reeds, strips of leather, or rude fibres into a material for dress, by a process analogous to that of weaving, preceded the practice of spinning yarn from a congeries of elementary fibres. It was practised in Egypt, in China, and in India at least as early as B.C. 2000. The Scriptures contain similes drawn from the art of weaving, and it is referred to in the Homeric poems and other early classical works. Weavers settled in England in 1132 works. Weavers settled in England in 1132 and 1331, were incorporated in the reign of Henry I. (1100—35), and were much encouraged by Edward III. WEDDING OF THE ADRIATIC.—An annual ceremony performed on Ascension Day by the Doge of Venice, who went with much pomp and ceremony in the Bucentaur, or state barge, attended by the nobility and foreign ambassadors, and dropped his ring into the water. This strange ceremony, denoting the supre-macy of Venice, was instituted in 1176, under the following circumstances :- In that year, the Doge, Sebastiano Ziani, defeated the combined fleets of Pisa, Genoa, and Ancona, under the command of the Emperor Frederick the First's son, Otho, who was made prisoner and carried to Venice. On the return of the victorious fleet, Pope Alexander III., at that time a fugitive at Venice, presented Ziani with his ring, authorizing him and his successors to proclaim their right to the sovereignty of the Adriatic, and to subject it to the rule of Venice, as a wife is subjected to that of her husband,

WEEK .- According to Dion Cassius (155-When. According to blan casalas (25) 220), this division of time was first made by the Egyptians, from whom other natious borrowed it. The Jews had a week of days, reckoned from sabbath to sabbath; a week of years, consisting of seven years; and a week of seven times seven years, reckoned from one jubilee to another. Among the ancient Greeks and Romans the week was unknown. It was only gradually introduced with Christianity, under the later Emperors.

WEIGHTS.—A national standard of weight was first established in England in 1197, and a uniformity of weight throughout the kingdom was ordered by 9 Hen. III. c. 25 (1225). By 51 Hen. III. st. 1, c. 3 (1266), an English penny, weighing 32 wheat corns from the midst of the car, was made the standard weight. The weight of the pound (q. v.) was regulated by 31 Edw. I. c. 1 (1303); and a uniformity of weight throughout the realm was enforced by 27 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 10 (1353). By 8 Hen. VI. c. 5 (1420), every city was ordered to have a common balance and weights, for the free use of the inhabitants. Standard weights of brass were ordered to be made and sent to or brass were ordered to be made and sent to every city and borough by 7 Hen. VII. c. 4 (1490), which act was extended and confirmed by 11 Hen. VII. c. 4 (1494). Avoirdupois (q. v.) weight is first mentioned in 24 Hen. VIII. c. 3 (1532), where it is ordered to be used in the sale of butchers' meat. Uniformity of weights and measures was again enjoined by 16 Charles I. c. 19 (1648). The House of Commons appointed committees in 1758, 1759, and 1790, to examine the best means of securing an accurate standard of weights and measures. Geo. III. c. 102 (June 22, 1795), the justices at quarter sessions were empowered to appoint examiners of weights and scales; and in 1814 Parliament appointed another committee to consider the question of standard. The Prince Regent instituted a commission for the same purpose in 1819, which presented reports in 1819, in 1820, and in 1821. Their labours led to the passing of the act 5 Geo. IV. c. 74 (June 17, 1824, for establishing uniformity of weights and measures. This was amended by 4 & 5 Will, IV. c. 49 (Aug. 13, 1834), and both acts were repealed and new regulations established were repealed and new regulations established by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63 (Sep. 9, 1835). Troy weight is ordered to be used in sales of bullion and precious stones by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 29 (June 14, 1853). Further provisions for legalizing and preserving the standard were made by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 72 (July 30, 1855), and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 56 (Aug. 13, 1859). (See MEASURES, METRIC SYSTEM, &c.)

WEIMAR (Germany), capital of the grandduchy of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach (q. v.), was taken by the French Oct. 14, 1806. Emperors Alexander I. of Russia and Napoleon I. were entertained here by the Grand-duke, Oct. 6—14, 1808. Otho II. held a diet here in 975. Destructive fires occurred in 1299, in 1424, in 1618, and in 1774, and the town was almost destroyed by an inundation in 1613. The city church was built in 1400, the academy of painting was founded in 1781, the court theatre in 1825, and the Falk's Institution, for public education, in 1829. The colossal bronze statue to Herder (1744—Dec. 18, 1863) was erected Aug. 25, 1850. The Emperors of Austria and of Russia met here Oct. 1, 1857.

WEINSBERG (Battle). - Duke Guelph III. was defeated here in defending his eastle in Swabia against the Emperor Conrad III. in 1140. The Ghibelline and Guelph factions originated at this battle.

WEISSEMBERG (Battle).—Mathias Corvinus, King of Hungary, defeated the Turks at this town of Transylvania, in 1479. WEISSEMBURG, or WEISSENBURG (Alsace).—Dagobert I. (628—38) founded an abbey here, and the town was gradually formed around it. In 1247 it was made a free city, was annexed to France by the treaty of Ryswick annexed to France by the treaty of Hyswick in 1697, and was taken by the Inperialists in 1744. Würmser forced the French lines at this place Oct. 13, 1793. It was recovered by the French Dec. 27. (See Stuhl-Weissenburg.) WELAU, WEHLAU, or VEHLAU (Treaty), was concluded Sep. 19, 1657, between the Elector of Brandenburg and Poland, at this town, in Silcsia, founded in 1636 by the Teutonic knights. It recognized the independence of Brandenburg.

WELLINGTON COLLEGE (Hampshire), for the support and education of the orphan children of soldiers, was erected at Sandhurst in memory of the illustrious duke whose name it bears, the funds for the purpose-upwards of £109,000—having been ruised by private subscription. The foundation stone was laid Monday, June 2, 1856, by Queen Victoria, who also performed the inauguration ceremony, Saturday, Jan. 29, 1859. WELLS.—The art of boring wells was practised in the East at least 4,000 years ago. Abraham's servant encountered Rebekah at a well, B.C. 1859 (Gen. xxiv.). Danaus is stated by Pliny the Elder (23—Aug. 24, 79) to have introduced wells into Greece from Egypt about B.C. 1500. The superstitious veneration of wells and fountains was prohibited by Athelstan in 960, and the immemorial custom of decorating wells with garlands and flowers on Holy Thursday, or at Whitsuntide, is still preserved at Tissington, Wirksworth, and other villages in Derbyshire.

WELLS (Somersetshire) .- This city and WELLS (Somersetsmre).—Inis city and borough originated in a collegiate church founded by Ina, King of Wessex, towards the end of the 7th century; became the seat of a bishopric in 909 (See BATH AND WELLS); and is chiefly remarkable for its beautiful cathedral, which was founded by Bishop Wulfhelm, or Wyffeline (923—928), and restored or refounded by Bishop Joceline (1206—44). The two west towers were added about the end of the 14th century. The Vicar's Close was founded by Walter de Hull, sub-dean, in 1335, and was much enlarged by Ralph de Salopia in 1348. Bishop Beckington erected a cross in 1450, which was replaced by another in 1780. (See EXETER, Bishopric.)

WENDS are by some authorities believed to be descendants of the Venedæ or Venedi, who inhabited European Sarmatia. Tacitus (61—117) was undecided whether to call them Germans or Sarmatians. They are a branch of the Slavonic race, and they settled in different parts of Germany in the 6th century. (See CARNIOLA, CROATIA, POMERANIA, &c.)

WENLOCK (Shropshire).—The abbey was founded by Millburga, a relative of the kings of Mercia, about 680. The ruins are of the 13th century. It was the first town in England which required a charter of incorporation which received a charter of incorporation expressly conferring the right to return mem-bers to the House of Commons. This privilege

WESTERN AUSTRALIA, or SWAN RIVER

(Australia), comprising nearly one-fourth of the entire continent, was established under the name of the Swan River settlement, in Aug., 1829. By March, 1830, about 2,000 settlers had arrived. An extensive bed of coal was discovered by Dr. Van Sommer in 1847. At the request of the colonists, convicts were sent out to supply the labour market in 1849. The colony received a representative constitu-tion Aug. 5, 1850. Messrs. Panter, Harding, and Goldwyer were murdered by the natives during an exploring expedition, Nov. 13, 1864. (See Freemantle, Perry, &c.) WESTERN CHURCH was also called the Latin or Roman Church. Milman (Lat. Christ.

vol. ii. book iv. ch. ix., p. 203) remarks: "In the 8th century Rome suddenly, as it were, the sin century with a status of the connection with the older state of things, disjoined herself for ever from the effete and hopeless East, and placed herself at the head of the rude as yet, and dimly descried and remote, but more promising and vigorous civilization of the West. The Byzantine empire became a separate world, Greek Christianity a separate religion. The West, after some struggle, created its own empire: its natives formed an independent system, either of warring or of confederate nations. Latin Christianity was the life, the principle of union, of all the West; its centre, papal Rome." Differences of opinion between the Church of Rome and the Church at Constantinople (See Greek Church) existed from a very early period. The Arian controversy in the 4th century; the disputes concerning the Filioque in the 6th century; the Monothelite controversy in the 7th century; and the Iconoclast controversy early in the 8th century, paved the way for the final separation which occurred in 876. WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—According to tradition, St. Peter visited Britain in 65, and founded a church on Thorney Isle, which was the origin of Westminster Abbey. Another account is that it occupies the site of a Roman temple of Apollo, destroyed by an earthquake during the reign of Antoninus Pius (138-161); but no authentic record places its erection earlier than about 604, when Sebert, King of Essex, embraced Christianity, and founded a church in honour of God and St. Peter, to the west of London. This church, having fallen into decay, was restored by Edgar, soon after his accession, in 957, at the request of St. Dunstan. It was rebuilt by Edward the Confessor between 1050 and Dec. 28, 1065, when the minster was consecrated. Edward the Confessor was buried in the abbey, Jan. 6, 1066, in which since his reign the majority of English sovereigns have been crowned. Henry III. commenced the erection of additional buildings May 16, 1220, and continued the enlargement until nearly the end of his long reign, the new abbey being opened Oct. 13, 1269. (See Covent Garden.) Edward I. deposited the Scotch coronation stone and other trophies of the Scottish kingdom in the abbey in 1297; and it was partially destroyed abbey in 1297; and it was partially destroyed by fire March 29, 1298. A murder was committed in the church Aug. 11, 1378, in consequence of which it was closed for four months. The great western window was set up in 1490. The beautiful chapel of Henry VII. was founded by that sovereign Jan. 24, 1503, and on his death in 1509 became his place of sepulture. Henry VIII. dissolved the abbey Jan. 16, 1540, and restored it as a cathedral church Dec. 17. (See WESTMINSTER, Bishopric.) Queen Mary refounded the monastery of Westminster Sep. 7, 1556. Elizabeth again removed the monks July 12, 1559, and made the abbey a collegiate church for a dean and 12 prebends, a conegrate church for a dean and 12 precental May 21, 1560. The puritan parliament appointed a committee to denolish all monuments of superstition and idolatry in this church, April 24, 1643, and it is said to have been used as a military barrack the same year. The House of Commons voted a sum of money for the repair and restoration of Westminster Abbey in 1697, and employed Sir Christopher Wren to carry out the proposed reparation. The erection of the west posed reparation. The erection of the west front was commenced in 1715, the great rose window was finished in 1722, and the towers were completed in 1735. A fire which broke out in the roof of the tower July 9, 1803, did serious injury to the woodwork of the choir. Henry the Seventh's Chapel was restored between 1809 and 1822 by Benjamin Wyatt. Another fire occurred April 27, 1829, but was extinguished before it had done much damage.

1847. Evening services were first celebrated in Westminster Abbey Jan. 3, 1858. The 800th anniversary of its foundation was celebrated Dec. 28, 1865. WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY. — (See WESTMINSTER BRIDGE (London).-The WESTMINSTER BRIDGE (London).—The first bridge at Westminster, founded Jan. 29, 1739, was built from the designs of Charles Labelye, a Swiss. It was opened Nov. 18, 1750, and consisted of 15 arches, containing, according to the architect's report, twice the amount of stone used in St. Paul's Cathedral. It was first lighted by gas Dec. 31, 1813. Owing to the sinking of the piles, the bridge was closed to carriers Aug. 1720. was closed to carriages Aug. 15, 1846, and to foot-passengers Aug. 27; and it was lightened of much of its stonework and reduced in height before it was reopened. These mea-sures having proved ineffectual, a local act of Parliament was passed in 1850 for the construction of a temporary bridge, but was not carried into effect. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 46 (Aug. 4, 1853), the management of the bridge was transferred to the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, who were works and rubic buildings, who were authorized to remove it and erect a new one. The design of Thomas Page was accepted; and in May, 1854, the works commenced, under an agreement that they were to be completed in three years. Owing to the proposal to erect new government offices at Westminster, and the consequent alterations of plan that might be necessary, they were suspended, March 20, 1856. They were resumed in 1857, and a portion of the bridge was opened for carriage traffic in 1860. The expense of the bridge up to July, 1861, was £316,936, and a further outlay of £60,692 was voted by Parliament. It consists of seven iron arches, and is 990 feet long and 85 wide. It was formally opened throughout May 24. 1862. The better regulation of the traffic was secured by 27 & 28 Viet. c. 88 (July 29, 1864). WESTMINSTER CHESS CLUB (London)

was formed in 1866. WESTMINSTER CLUB (London) was founded in 1851 or 1852, on the dissolution of the Alfred Club (q. v.).
WESTMINSTER CONFESSION.—The name given to the Confession of Faith, drawn up in 1643 by the Assembly of Divines (q. v.). It was approved by the Scotch Kirk in 1649.

WESTMINSTER HALL (London), said to be, with the single exception of the hall of justice at Padua, the largest room in Europe which is not supported by pillars, was founded by William II. in 1097. In 1224 it was made the permanent seat of the English law courts, and in 1397 it was repaired by Richard II. A fire, which broke out Feb. 20, 1631, was checked before it had time to extend its ravages. The hall was repaired at a cost of

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL, or ST. PETER'S COLLEGE (London).—Henry VIII. founded an educational establishment in connection with the abbey of Westminster about 1540. A school had been attached to the abbey at a The woodwork of the choir was restored in much earlier period. It was re-established by

The William Camden, the antiquary, was master of town was seized by the insurgents, who William Canden, the antiquary, was master of this school from 1593 to 1599, and Dr. Richard

WESTMORLAND (England), partly occupied by the Brigantines, was comprised in the Maxima Cæsariensis of the Runans, after the subjugation of South Britain, about 204, and, was conquered by the Angles of Northumbria about 685. William I. divided it between two of his vassals in 1068. Having long been an object of contention between England and Scotland, the King of Scotland, in considera-tion of a grant of lands in Cumberland and Northumberland, abandoned his claim to the county in 1237.

WESTPHALIA (Germany).—The ancient duchy of Westphalia was separated from western Saxony by Frederick I. in 1180. In 1613 Prussia obtained possession of part of the country, and in 1801 it was coded to the Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt. Napoleon I. creeted Westphalia into a kingdom, under his brother Jerome, Aug. 18, 1806. (See Cassel.) Bruns-wick-Wolfenbüttel, Hesse-Cassel, and Magde-burg were annexed by the treaty of Tilsit, July 9, 1807; and Hanover, March 16, 1810. This kingdom came to an end after the battle of Leipsic, Oct. 16, 18, and 19, 1813; and the different provinces were restored to their former possessors in 1813—14.

WESTPHALIA (Treaties).—The name Public Peace of Westphalia was given to a compact made in 1371, between the Emperor Charles IV. and the states of the empire, for maintaining the peace of Germany. The name Peace of Westphalia was given to two treatics terminating the Thirty Years' war, the first between the Emperor and Sweden, signed at Osnaburg, Aug. 6, 1648, and the second between the Emperor and France, signed at Münster, Oct. 24, 1648. The negotiations for this peace commenced at Munster, where the Congress held its first meeting in July, 1643, and settled the preliminaries in Jan., 1647. France was confirmed in the possession of Alsace, and other territory. Sweden attained Pomerania, Rügen, Bremen, and Verden; and the inde-pendence of the United Provinces and of Switzerland was recognized. Spain con-brought to a close by the peace of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659.

WEST POINT (United States).—The first settlement was made here May 17, 1723. The United States Government purchased the land Sep. 10, 1790, and forts were erected. The military school, established in 1794, in accordance with a recommendation made by a committee in Oct., 1776, was destroyed by fire in 1796. It was reopened March 16, 1802. The new barracks for cadets were completed

The abbey was founded about 1190. A council was held here in 1240. The town obtained a charter in 1318. A parliament was held here by

WEYMOUTH (Dorsetshire), an important commercial place in the 14th century, was united with the borough of Melcombe Regis in 1571. Ralph Allon, of Bath, brought it into repute as a bathing-place about 1762. George III. paid his first visit July 16, 1789. WHALEBONE.—Bracton and Britton, who flourished during the 13th century, state that it was an ancient feudal right of the Queen of England to claim the tail of every whale caught on the British coast; but the earliest mention of whalebone, which is contained in the head of the animal, occurs in 1593, when some English sailors brought a large number of fins, as the pieces of baleen are erroneously called, from Cape Breton. A riding-whip of whalebone, possessed by Queen Elizabeth (1558—1603), is mentioned as a valuable article. The first instance of the bone being systematically sought for as an article of commerce occurs in 1617. By 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 23 (1698), the importation of ready-cut whalebone was prohibited. Laurence Kortwright patented certain improvements in the preparation of this useful material in March, 1841. (See Hygro-METER.)

WHALE-FISHERY, practised by the Norwegians as early as 887, was systematically pursued as a calling by the Biscayans during the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. By 17 Edw. II. c. 11 (1324), the king was entitled to all whales and great sturgeons taken in British seas; and in 1388 Edward III. rewarded Peter Bayune for his expense in providing a fact for the royal use, by grapting him a fax. fleet for the royal use, by granting him a tax of £6 on every whale carried into the port of Biarritz. The Dutch ascertained that whales existed in large quantities in the neighbourhood of Spitzbergen in 1596. In 1611 the first English whaling expedition sailed from Hull, which remained for a long period the centre of which remained for a long period the centre of the English whale-fishery. In 1614 the Dutch trade was monopolized by a single company, but in 1642 it was thrown open. The American whale-fishery commenced in 1690, and that of the English South Sea Company in 1724. The harpoon-gun was invented in 1731. Several harpoon-gun was invented in 1731. Several acts of Parliament have been passed for the encouragement of the whale-fisheries, the chief being 22 Geo. II. c. 45 (1749). Louis XVI. revived the French fishery in 1784. Owing to the decreasing demand for whale oils, in consequence of the use of gas and the scarcity of fish, the whaling trade is declining.

The custom of using an iron tire was practised by the Romans, and wheels made entirely of metal were sometimes employed in classic war-chariots. The wheel has been variously applied by different nations as an instrument of punishment. The Greeks bound the criminal to the circumference, and whirled him round until death was the result. Breaking on the wheel was introduced into Germany, and was legally adopted in France by Francis I.

Hoyle's treatise appeared in 1743, and he taught the game at a guinea a lesson. It is said to have been called Whist, or Hist, because silence is indispensable, and was formerly called Whisk.

WHITEBAIT.—Pennant, in "British Zoology" (vol. iii. p. 371), published in 1776, remarks:—"During the month of July there appear in the Thames, near Blackwall and Greenwich, innumerable multitudes of small

Greenwich, innumerable multitudes of small fish, which are known to the Londoners by the name of whitebait. They are esteemed very delicious when fried with fine flour, and occasion during the season a vast resort of the lower order of epicures to the taverns contiguous to the places they are taken at." Yarrell, in 1828, showed that the whitebait is a distinct species; and a writer in the "Popular Science Review" for July, 1865, thus suns up his views:—"The whitebait belongs, like the shad, herring, sardine, anchovy, and sprat, to the great family of abdominal-soft-finned fishes, known as Clupeidæ. It comes under the genus Clupea, of which the shad is C. alosa; but since it has now to be regarded as a separate species, it has received the specific appellation of alba; hence, when fully titled, it is styled Clupea alba. In France it is called blanquette, and is found in great abundance on the coasts of Picardy and Normandy, as well as in the Northern Ocean." Six dishes of whitebait are mentioned in the funeral feast of Thomas

Sutton, May 28, 1612.
WHITEBAIT DINNERS.—The annual ministerial whitebait dinner is said to have originated about 1721, when Capt. Perry was employed in repairing Dagenham Reach, in Essex, and a body of parliamentary com-missioners was appointed to superintend his labours. These gentlemen held a board meeting every year at the Reach House, and concluded their business proceedings by a fish dinner, to which, on one occasion, they invited the great commoner William Pitt. The experiment proved very successful, and became a precedent for a similar annual festival, which was afterwards removed to Greenwich. According to another account it originated with Sir Robert Preston, M.P. for Dover, who had a cottage on the banks of Dagenham Reach, to which he often invited Mr. George Rose, of the Treasury. Mr. Pitt was asked to join the small circle, and others were afterwards in-

In 1786 another Roman Catholic party appeared, known as the Rightboys, who also proved very dangerous. The White-boys were again in insurrection in 1822, when they committed many shocking out-

HITEHALL (London).—The first palace on the site of the modern Whitehall was erected by Hubert de Burgh, the celebrated Chamberlain of King John, and Chief Justiciary of England under Henry III., who bequeathed it on his death, in 1243, to the convent of the Black Friars in Holborn. In 1248 it was purchased by Walter de Gray, Archbishop of York, who made it the town palace of that see, on which account it was called York Place, Its magnificence was greatly increased by Cardinal Wolsey, who resigned it to Henry VIII. by a charter dated Feb. 7, 1530, when its name was changed to Whitehall, and the building became, the royal palace of the English sovereigns. The old banqueting-house was destroyed by fire Tuesday, Jan. 12, 1619, and the present edifice, commenced by Inigo Jones, June 1, 619, was completed March 31, 1622. The ceiling was painted abroad by Rubens in 1635. Whitehall was the scene of the execution of Charles I., Jan. 30, 1649. The scaffold was erected in the street, and, according to some contemporary authors, a passage was opened contemporary authors, a passage was opened through the wall of the palace for the egress of the king. Grilling Gibbons' statue of James II. was erected Dec. 31, 1686. A considerable portion of the old palace was destroyed by a fire which broke out April 10, 1501; and it was completely destroyed by a fire which commenced Tuesday, Jan. 4, 1698, and lasted 17 hours. The banqueting-house was converted into a chapel by George I. in 1724, and Holbein's Gate was removed to make room and Holoelin's date was reliabled to make the for Parliament Street in Aug., 1759. WHITFIELDITES, or LADY HUNTINGDON'S CONNECTION, the followers of the

Rev. George Whitfield, or Whitefield, who was born at the Bell inn, Gloucester, Dec. 16, 1714. Having entered Pembroke College, Oxford, as a servitor, in 1732, he formed an intimacy with the brothers John and Charles Wesley. In 1736 he was ordained a deacon. In Dees, 1737, he accompanied the Wesleys on a missionary tour to Georgia; and in 1738 he returned for the purpose of being admitted to priest's orders, and to collect funds for the support of the religious efforts being made in America. During this visit the orthodox clergy excluded him from their pulpits, and he commenced preaching in the open air to the Bristol colliers. In Aug., 1739, he returned to Georgia, where he remained two years. On his return he separated from the Wesleys, in consequence of their rejection of Calvinism, and in June, 1741, his admirers built him a large temporary shed in Moorfields, which he called the Tabernacle. In Aug., 1744, he made a third voyage to America, where he remained nearly four years, after which he was appointed chaplain to the Countess of Huntingdon, at whose suggestion the Tabernacle was rebuilt, and opened in June, 1755. The Tabernacle in the Tottenham Court Road was opened in Nov., 1756; and in 1767 Lady Huntingdon established a college for the education of young ministers in the doctrines of Calvinistic Methodism at Trevecca, in South Wales. Whitfield went on several preaching excursions through England, Scotland, and Ireland. He made seven voyages to America, and died at Newbury, in New England, Sep. 30, 1770. The first ordination of Whitfieldite ministers took place in 1783, when the connection seceded from the Church of England, of which, however, it retained the forms and most of the doctrines, the chief difference being the absence of episcopacy. Rules for the government of the sect were prepared in 1785. The Countess of Huntingdon, from whom the followers of Whitfield derive the name by which they are best brounded transcriptors.

By 6 & 7 will. III. c. 6 (1605), various taxes were imposed upon childless widowers, according to their rank in life, the rates being the same as were demanded from bachelors (q. v.). WIGHT, ISLE OF (Hampshire).—This island, known to the Romans as Vecta or Vectis, and to the ancient Britons as Guith or Guict, conquered by Titus Vespasian, in 43, was seized by Cerdic, King of Wessex, in 530. Wulfhere, King of Mercia, subdued it in 661; but in 686 it was reunited to Wessex by Ceadwalla, who compelled the inhabitants to embrace Christianity, and disgraced his victory by many acts of cruelty. The Danes took it in 787, during their first invasion of Britain, and converted it into a magazine for the spoils taken from the Saxons. They frequently ravaged the island, especially in 897, in 998, in root, and in roak. In ro52 it was devastated by Godwin, Earl of Kent, in revenge for his banishment by Edward the Confessor, and in ro66 it was invaded by Tostig, Earl of Northumberland, at the instigation of William I. Edward I. purchased the island in 1293, and in 1340 it was attacked by the French, who were driven to their ships by the islanders. They returned in 1377, and committed great devastations; but failed in an attempted siege of Carisbrook Castle, which was gallantly defended by Sir Hugh Tyrrel. In 1445 Henry VI. crowned Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, King of the Isle of Wight. The dignity wick, king or the isle of wight. The dignity was merely titular, and conveyed no regal authority; and on the duke's death without issue, soon after his coronation, the title was discontinued. In 1545 the French made another unsuccessful attempt on the island: this was the last foreign invasion. The Isle of Wight suffered considerably during the civil the Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows in 1823. The Hindoo custom of sutteeism, or burning the widow with the body of her dead visited the island: and it is a favourite resort of Queen Victoria. (See OSBORNE HOUSE.) The of Queen Victoria. (See OSBORNE HOUSE.) The house of industry, for the indigent poor of the island, was established in 1770. Parkhurst prison, founded as a military hospital and barracks in 1778, received its first convicts Dec. 26, 1838. The salary of £1,300 per annum, formerly attached to the governorship of the Isle of Wight, ceased in 1841.

WIGMORE. - (See MORTIMER'S CROSS.) WIGS.—The Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans were familiar with the use of wigs, either covering the whole head, or merely the front, and made of wool, goats' hair, and other materials. Periwigs were introduced at Rome during the imperial æra. Wigs are said to have been first worn in England during the reign of Stephen (1135—54). Long periwigs were introduced in France about 1529, and in 1505 it was unsafe for children to walk out alone in this country, lest they should be robbed of their hair for the wig-makers. Ladies' wigs are mentioned in 1608. Charles II. introduced enormous perukes, which it was fashionable to comb in public, as mentioned by Killigrew in 1663. Wigs with large toupées are first alluded to in 1731, and were rendered popular by the Macaroni Club in 1772. After undergoing various modifications, the fashion of wearing wigs in preference to the natural hair was abandoned about the end of the 18th was admired about the old of the form eentury. (See HAIR.) WILDERNESS (Battle of the) was fought at this place in Virginia, between the Con-federates, commanded by Gen. Lee, and the Federals, under Gen. Grant, May 5 and 6, 1864. In spite of the overwhelming numbers brought against him, Gen. Lee maintained his ground on the first day, and drove Grant's hosts before him in confusion on the second. In consequence of the smallness of the forces under quence of the smallness of the forces under his command, Gen. Lee gradually retired upon Spottsylvania (q. v.), May 7 and 8.

WILD GUEUX, or BEGGARS.—(See GUEUX.) WILLIAM THE FIRST, the illegitimate son of Robert I., Duke of Normandy, was been at Februare but the Managard the born at Falaise about 1024. He succeeded his father as William II., Duke of Normandy, in 1035, and married Matilda, daughter of Baldwin V., Count of Flanders, in 1054. They had four sons and five or six daughters. Robert, the eldest, born in 1056, was surnamed Curthose, and became Duke of Normandy in 1087. His brother, Henry I. of England, waged war against him (See Tinchebray), and imprisoned him in Cardiff Castle, where he died Feb. 10, 1335. Of William the First's other children, William (See WILLIAM II.) and Henry (See HENRY I.) became kings of England. Richard died young; and of his daughters, Cecilia, Adeliza, Matilda, Constance, Adela, and pro-bably Gundred, but little is known. William I., having laid elaim to the English crown, landed on the coast of Sussex, defeated Harold III. at the battle of Hastings (q. v.), Oct. 14, 1066, and was erowned at Westminster Dec. 25. His queen, Matilda, arrived in England in 1068, and was crowned on Whit Sunday, May 11. She died Nov. 2, 1083, and was buried at Caen. William I. died at Rouen Sep. 8 or 9, 1087, and was buried at Caen. He was surnamed the Conqueror.

WILLIAM THE SECOND, the third son of William I and his wife Matilda, was born about 1060; succeeded on the death of his father, and was erowned Sunday, Sep. 26, 1087. He was killed in the New Forest, Aug. 2, 1100, and was buried at Winchester. Williams liam II., who never married, was surnamed Rufus, from the colour of his hair. WILLIAM THE THIRD and MARY THE

SECOND.—William III., son of William II., stadtholder of Holland and Zealand, and Mary, daughter of Charles I. of England, was born at the Hague, Nov. 4, 1650. He was made stadtholder of Holland and Zealand in July, 1672. William married Mary, daughter of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. of England, Nov. 4, 1677. At the Revolution the crown was offered by the Convention to William and Mary, who became king and queen of England, Feb. 13, 1689, and were crowned April 11. They reigned jointly until the death of Mary, which took place Dec. 28, 1694. She was buried at Westminster, March 1694. She was buried at Westminster, March 5, 1695. William III. died at Kensington, March 8, 1702, and was buried at Westminster April 12. William and Mary left no children. WILLIAM THE FOURTH, Duke of Clarence, the third son of George III., was born Aug. 21, 1765. He married the princess Amelia Adelaide Theresa of Saxe-Meiningen, Amenia Ademaide Theresa of Saxe-Mehningen, July 11, 1818, and sueceeded his brother, George IV., as King of England, June 26, 1830. The coronation took place Sep. 8, 1831. William IV. died at Windsor, June 20, 1837, and was buried there July 8. His queen, who survived him, died Dec. 2, 1849. They had but one child, a daughter (born March 27, 1830) who died in infrarer.

WILLIAM AND MARY.—This vessel, plying regularly between Bristol and Waterford, struck on the rocks called the Willeys, near struck on the rocks called the Willeys, near the Holmes lighthouse, about 11 o'clock at night, Oct. 26, 1817, and sank in a quarter of an hour. Sixty persons were on board, and only nine were saved. They escaped in a boat and landed a few miles from Cardiff.

WILLIAMSBURG (N. America).-This city between the York and James rivers, founded in 1699, was the scat of the English Government. It remained the capital of Virginia till ment. It remained the capital of Virginia till 1779. Battles were fought here Nov. 11, 1813, and May 5, 1862. WILLS.—Testamentary arrangements of WILLS.—Testamentary arrangements of property were made in the earliest ages, and appear to be referred to by Moses, who states that Jacob bequeathed to Joseph a portion above his brethren, B.C. 1689 (Gen. xlviii. 22). Solon is said to have introduced wills into Greece, B.C. 594; and they were first regulated at Rome by the laws of the Twelve Tables, B.C. 450. Codicils were introduced by Trebatius Testa, B.C. 31. Roman wills were required by law to be in Latin until 439, when they were allowed to be in Greek; and the practice of making wills was established by the Romans among the Teutonic nations. Lands were devisable by wills in this country before the Conquest; and the privilege of making wills was specially sanctioned by Henry I. in 1100. Richard II. made a will in 1399, which is regarded as the first royal will on record, though it is asserted that similar documents were prepared by previous sovereigns. Testamentary power of freehold land was established by the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII. lished by the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII. e. 1 (1540), which was explained and confirmed by 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 5 (1543). By 29 Charles II. c. 3, s. 5 (1676), wills of land are required to be in writing, signed by the testator, and attested and subscribed by three or four witnesses. The royal power to make wills is defined by 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 88, s. 10 July 28, 1800). The laws respecting wills and testaments were amended and consolidated by Will IV and Vict. 26 (July 382) which 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 26 (July 3, 1837), which was amended by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24 (June 17, 1822). (See Executors, Mormain, Prerogative Court, Probate Court, TheLusson

WILMINGTON (U. States).—This seaport town of Delaware was attacked Dec. 24 and 25, town of Delaware was attacked Dec. 24 and 25, 1864, by the Federals, who were compelled to retreat. They returned and effected its capture Feb. 22, 1865. (See Fort Fisher.)
WILMINGTON ADMINISTRATION.—The Earl of Wilmington succeeded Sir Robert Walpole as first lord of the treasury, Feb. 16,

1742. The cabinet was thus constituted :-

Treasury	.Earl of Wilmington.
Lord Chancellor
President of the Council	.Earl of Harrington.
Privy Seal	.Lord Gower.
Chancellor of Exchequer	.Mr., afterwards Lord Sandys
Principal Secretaries of	Duke of Newcastle and Lord Carteret,
State	Lord Carteret.
Admiralty	Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham.
	Nottingham.
Ordnance	Duke of Argyle.

The Earl of Wilmington died July 26, 1743, and a new ministry was formed by Mr. Pelham. (See Pelham Administration.)

WILNA, or VILNA (Russia), is the capital of a government of the same name. A treaty by which Gothard Kettler, last grand master of the Livonian knights, ceded Livonia to Poland, was signed here in 1561. Protestants were admitted to equal privileges with Roman Catholics by the diet assembled at Vilna in 1563. A truce between Russia and Poland was agreed to here in 1656. The university was founded in 1803. The town was occupied by Napoleon I. on his march to Moscow, June 28, 1812; and the remnant of his army, on their return in Dec., were driven out by the Cossacks.

WILTON (Wiltshire), formerly capital of the Saxon kingdom of Wessex, was the scene of a victory gained over the Danes by Alfred, in 871. It was plundered and burned by the Danes in 1003. By the dismemberment of Sherborne, in 909, it became the seat of a bishopric, which was reunited to Sherborne in 1058. A new church was erected in 1844. (See ELLANDUNE, Battle.)

WIMBLEDON.—(See National Rifle Asso-CIATION, VOLUNTEERS, WIBBANDUNE, &c.) WIMPFEN (Battle).—Tilly defeated the

Margrave of Baden at this town in Hesse Darmstadt, May 6, 1622. WINCHELSEA (Sussex).—It is not known whether this town existed in the time of the Romans, though it is mentioned as an important place under the Saxons. Under the Norman sovereigns, Winchelsea became one of the chief ports for communication with France, and it was added to the Cinque Ports (q. v.) March 27, 1191. Much injury was done to the town by severe storms and inundations in 1236, and Oct. 1, 1250; and in 1266 it was almost ruined by the severity with which Prince Edward suppressed the frequent piracies of which the inhabitants were guilty. The old town was finally destroyed by an inundation in 1287, in consequence of which the king granted a charter for the erection of a new port in the adjacent manor of Iham. Edward III. and the Black Prince defeated the Spanish in a sea-fight off the modern town of Winchelsea, Aug. 29, 1350. The town was burned by the French in 1377, and March 15, 1380. In 1404 the walls were repaired, and in 1449 the French again landed, and burned the place. Camber Castle, two miles north-east of Winchelsea, was built by Henry VIII. in 1539. In 1582 the town is mentioned as already in a state of decay, and it has lost all trace of winder importance. The manufacture of cambric was introduced in 1761.

WINCHESTER (Bishopric).—Birinus was appointed first bishop of the West Saxons at Dorchester, by Cynegils, King of Wessex, in 635. In 650 the diocese was divided into two sees, one of which was fixed at Winchester, and in 676 the sees were re-united and settled in Winchester. In 705 another division oc-curred, part of the diocese being erected into a new bishopric at Sherborne (q. v.), and the remainder being entrusted to Daniel, who thus became the first bishop of Winchester.

WINCHESTER (Hampshire), the Venta Belgarum of the Romans. The origin of this city was attributed by tradition to Ludor Rous Hudibras, King of the Britons, B.c. 892, and there is sufficient reason for believing that it really was founded by the first Celtic init really was founded by the first Celtic in-habitants of the island, by whom it was called Caer Gwent, or White City. It subsequently passed into the hands of the Belgae, by whom it was occupied at the period of Julius Caesar's invasion, B.C. 55. The Christian king Lucius, who flourished in 181, is reported to have erected a church or cathedral at Winchester, which was destroyed during the persecution of 304, but was afterwards rebuilt. In 516 the of 304, but was attended to the converted the church into a temple of the Saxon gods, and in 540 erected the city into the capital of his new kingdom of Wessex, under the name of Winchester. Cynegils founded the cathedral in 635, and it was consecrated by St. Birinus, apostle of the West Saxons, and their first bishop, in 648. Egbert erected Winchester into the capital of England in 827, and it maintained the distinction throughout the Saxon period. In 871 the Danes ravaged the city and massacred the inhabitants. It was restored by Alfred the Great (871—901). St. Ethelwold completed a restoration of the cathedral in 980; and in 1013 the city surrendered to Sweyn. William I. founded the castle before 1070, and in 1079 Bishop Walkelin commenced the rebuilding of the cathedral, which was completed in 1093. Councils were held at Winchester in Nov., 855; in 968 or 975;

in 1021; in 1070; April 1, 1076; Aug. 25, 1139; and April 7, 1141. Winchester attained its and April 7, 1141. Winchester attained its greatest prosperity during the reign of Henry I. (1100—35). Several kings were crowned here (See Coronation), and it was generally the meeting place of the Parliament, when it extended a mile in every direction beyond its present limits. The hospital of St. Cross was founded in 1132 by Henry de Blois, Bishop of the diocese, and Wolvesey Castle in 1138. The treaty of Winchester, between Stephen and Matilda, was signed Nov. 7, 1153. (See Constable, England, &c.) The selection of London as the capital of England in 1156, and the suppression of the monasteries by Henry VIII. in 1536 and 1539, caused the decline of this city. It was taken by Oliver Cromwell in Sep., 1645, and was much favoured by Charles II., who founded a royal palace, which was intended to be built by Sir Christopher Wren, March 23, 1683, but which was discontinued on the death of the king. The cathedral was renovated during the reign of Queen Anne, and the guildhall was founded in 1711. The unfinished palace of Charles II. was converted into military barracks in 1810. The old city cross, erected in the 15th century, was restored in 1866.

WINCHESTER BUSHEL .- (See BUSHEL.) WINCHESTER SCHOOL .- St. Mary College of Winchester was founded in connection with New College, Oxford, by William of Wykeham (William Long), bishop of the diocese, in 1387. The charter is dated Oct., 1382. The building, commenced March 26, 1387, was completed in 1393. A school existed at Winchester at a nuch earlier period.
WINDING-UP ACTS, to facilitate the dissolution of joint-stock companies and other partnerships, were amended by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45 (Aug. 14, 1848). This act was amended by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108 (Aug. 1, 1849). These acts were repealed, and the laws regarding such associations remodelled, by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47 (July 14, 1856), which was amended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14 (July 13, 1857). Another act (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89) was passed Aug. 7, 1862. It came into operation Nov. 2.

WINDMILLS, of oriental origin, are said to have been used in Hungary before 718. They were introduced into England and France about 1040, and were used for drainage purposes in Holland soon after 1408. The earliest windmills were constructed to turn completely round, the movable top being a Flemish improvement of the 16th century.

WINDOWS.—The Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans seldom used windows in their houses and temples, the principal rooms of which were mostly lighted from above. Those that did exist were small, being originally mere openings in the wall, closed by shutters.

in this country by 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 18 (1695). The duty was increased by 20 Geo. II. c. 3 (1746), amended by 21 Geo. II. c. 10 (1748), and further increased by the Tea-commutation Act, 24 Geo. III. sess. 2, c. 38 (1784). It was again raised by 37 Geo. III. c. 105 (July 19, 1797); by 42 Geo. III. c. 34 (April 15, 1802); and by 48 Geo. III. c. 55 (June 1, 1808). It was reduced by 4 Geo. IV. c. 11 (March 19, 1823), and was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36 (July 24, 1821)

WINDS.—The existence of the trade winds was first ascertained by Columbus at the end of the 15th century, and they were first correctly explained on scientific principles by George Hadley in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1735. (See STORMS.)

WINDSOR (Berkshire) derives its name from the Saxon town of Windleshora, which was situated about two miles from the present town, and was granted by Edward the Confessor (1043-66) to the monks of Westminster. william I received it in exchange for Wokendune, in Essex, soon after his accession in 1066, and commenced the crection of the 1000, and confinenced the Cector of the castle, where he held his court at Whitsuntide, 1070. A council was held at Windsor April 26, 1114. The fortifications and buildings were much extended by Henry I. (1100—35, and in 1216 King John successfully defended the castle against the barons. Henry III, founded a chapel, the original of St. George's chapel, in 1240. Edward I. erected the town into a free borough in 1276, and the chapel was refounded by Edward III., who obtained a papal bull sanctioning the act, Nov. 30, 1351. The same monarch caused William of Wykeham to rebuild the eastle about 1360, and made it the seat of his newly-founded order of the Garter (q, v). Edward IV. commenced the rebuilding of the chapel in 1474, which was continued by succeeding sovereigns until it was completed by Henry VIII. (1509–47). Parliaments were frequently held here. Elizabeth constructed the terrace, and in 1572 erected the gate on the hill next the town; and a new gallery and banqueting-house were added soon after 1576. The park and forest were surveyed inter 250. The past in 1605, and various improvements were made by Charles I, in 1635. The chapel was entered by a Parliamentary force Oct. 23, 1642, and was afterwards much injured by the Puritans; and the castle was the prison of Charles I. (q, v) from Dec. 22, 1648, to Jan. 19, 1649. Sir Christopher Wren made several improvements during the reign of Charles II., who refaced the terrace with stone in 1676, and erected an equestrian statue of himself in 1680. The Queen's Walk was formed in 1707, and the drive along the Long Walk in 1710. The Queen's Lodge was completed in 1782, and the did exist were small, being originally mere openings in the wall, closed by shutters. Iteration of St. George's chapel was newly sometimes they were covered with lattice or not sometimes they were covered with lattice or new the constant of the most sometimes by plates or transparent stone. Glass windows were found at Pompeti, which was overwhelmed in 79, and were reinvented about the 3rd century, and introduced into England by Benedict Biscop in 674. (See Glass.) The form of the windows is one of the most characteristic features of so one of the most characteristic features of Gothic architecture. Windows were first taxed without causing much damage. Prince Albert died at Windsor Castle, Saturday, Dec. 14, 1867, and his body was temporarily placed in the vaults of St. George's chapel. (See Albert MAUSOLEUM.) The Royal Free and Industrial

WINDSOR (Treaty).—The treaty between Henry VIII. and the Emperor, signed at Bruges, was ratified at Windsor in June, 1522.
WINDWARD ISLANDS.—(See Antilles, or

CARIBBEE ISLANDS, &c.)

WINE.—Noah made wine B.C. 2347 (Gen. ix. 20-21), and commentators believe that the art was known to the antediluvians. The Egyptians ascribed the invention to Osiris, whose worship was instituted about B.C. 2100; and the Chinese state that rice wine was manufactured by their king Ching Noung B.C. 1998. The Greeks and other classical nations regarded Bacchus, or Dionysius, who was reputed to have flourished about B.C. 1457, as the earliest wine-maker. The Jews esteemed the wines of Lebanon and Helbon; the Greeks those of Lesbos, Chios, and the other islands of the archipelago; and the Romans the celebrated Falernian and Cocuban. Ancient people mixed their wine with sea-water, asafcetida, and tar, and exhibited great discrimination in their preference of the vintages of certain years. The production of wine commenced in France soon after B.C. 600, when the culture of the vine (q. v.) was introduced at Marseilles. Provence, Dauphiny, Languedoc, and Auvergne were celebrated for their vintage as early as B.C. 120. In the time of the Romans and Saxons, wine was made in England; but the manufacture gradually declined, and, about 1154, the importation of wine from Bordeaux commenced. Hippocras, a mix-ture of wine and spices, was much admired during the Plantagenet period. Wine was exported from Madeira before 1460, and Ratafie wine was introduced into France from Italy in 1533. Sack, or sherry, from Xeres in Spain, Canary, and Malaga were the popular wines of the 16th and 17th centuries. The wines of Portugal were first imported about whites of Fortugal were the roots of the roots and the roots of the ro rigs, and port came into use about rigo. The practice of importing this wine qualified with brandy commenced in 1715, and led to many abuses in the wine-trade, which were much increased by the monopoly established in favour of the Oporto company, Sep. 10, 1756. The Catawba wine of the United States came into notice about 1826. Unsuccessful attempts to introduce Masdew as a substitute for port were made in 1832. The original Oporto company, abolished by Don Pedro in 1833, was re-established April 7, 1838. It was finally abolished in Oct., 1852. Australian wine of excellent quality received medals from the Society of Arts in 1866. Many statutes have Society of Arts in 1856. Many statutes have been enacted for regulating the duties on wine, one of the earliest of which is 7 Hen. VII. c. 3 (1490). Wine-dealers were compelled to take out a licence by 12 Charles II. c. 25 1660). The policy of taxing French wines at a higher rate than the wines of other countries was commenced by 4 Will. & Mary, c. 5 (1692), when an additional duty of £8 per tun was imposed. This differential duty was increased by subsequent acts, and was rendered permanent in 1703 by the Methuen treaty (q, v). William Pitt reduced the duties on french wines nearly one-half, and on other wines nearly a third, by 26 Geo. III. c. 59 (1786). They were again increased ros. 6d. per gallon on French wines, and 6s. rd. on Spanish and Portuguese, by 36 Geo. III. c. 123 (May 19, 1796). Mr. Robinson, afterwards Lord Ripon, reduced them to 78. 3d. and 48. 10d. per gallon on French and other foreign 48. 102. Fer gain on the produce of the Cape of Good Hope, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 104 (July 5, 1825); and by the Equalization Act, 1 & 2 will. IV. c. 30 (Oct. 5, 1831), all foreign wines were rated at 58. 6d. per gallon, and Cape wines at 28. 9d. By the commercial treaty concluded with France Jan. 23, 1860, the duties on wines were reduced to 28. per callon until land. were reduced to 3s. per gallon until Jan. 1, 1861, when a scale of 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. per gallon, according to the amount of proof spirit contained in the wine, and of 38, per gallon on wine in bottles, came into operation. Wine licences were granted to refreshment-houses by 23 Vict. c. 27 June 14, 1860). (See GAUGING, HEIDELBERG, &c.) WINTERTHUR (Switzerland), for some time a free and an imperial city, has belonged to Zurich since 1467.

WINWIDFIELD (Battle).—Penda, King of Mercia, was defeated and slain at this place, near Leeds, by Oswy, King of Northumberland, in 655.

WIPPEDSFLEET (Battle).—Hengist, the Saxon, gained his first victory over the Britons, led by Vortimer, in 466. He named the field after Wipped, one of his principal officers, who fell in the engagement.

WIRE was originally formed by hammering the metal on an anvil, and its manufacture by drawing is mentioned in the history of Augsburg in 1351, and in that of Nuremberg in 1360. A large drawing-machine driven by water, believed to have been the invention of a person named Rodolph, was constructed at Nuremberg about 1400. Anthony Fournier, a Frenchman, improved the art in 1570. Fine gold and silver wire, for spinning round silk and for weaving, was made by Frederick Held at Nuremberg in 1592, and after the patent for securing his process had been several times renewed, it was converted into a fief for the heirs male of the family, Sep. 26, 1622. In England, wire was manufactured by the hand till the art of drawing it was introduced by foreigners in 1565. The first flatting-mill was erected at Sheen, near Richmond, by a Dutchman, in 1663. (See GOLD AND SILVER WIRE DRAWERS, PINS, ROPE-MAKING, SCREW, &c.)
WIRTEMBERG.—(See WURTEMBERG.)

WISCONSIN (U. States) was visited by the French about 1660, and continued nominally in their possession till ceded to England in 1763. It was erected into a territorial government in 1836, and admitted into the Union as a state in 1848. Its constitution was confirmed by a popular convention in April, 1848.

WISMAR (Germany).—An alliance between France and Sweden against Austria was con-cluded at this town of Mecklenburg-Schwerin March 20, 1636. The town, founded in 1229, was granted to Sweden by the peace of Westphalia, Oct. 24, 1648, and purchased from Sweden by Schwerin for 1,200,000 dollars, in

WISSEHRAD (Battle).—The Emperor Sigis-WISCHRAD Battle).—Ine Emperor Signa-mund having abandoned the siege of Prague, held by the Hussites, was attacked at this place, in the vicinity, by Ziska, their leader, and totally defeated, July 14, 1420. WITCHCRAFT.—The Mosaic law enjoined death as the penalty of witcheraft, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxii. 18); but commentators are of opinion that the offence thus denounced was united with idolatry and also with the erime of poisoning. The earliest mention of a witch is that of Endor, whom Saul employed to raise the spirit of Samuel, B.C. 1055 (I Sam. xxviii. 7—25). Dr. Maekay, in his "Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular Delusions," says:—

"Europe, for a period of two centuries and a half, brooded upon the idea, not only that parted spirits walked the earth to meddle in the affairs of men, but that men had power to summon evil spirits to their aid, to work we upon their fellows. Thousands upon thousands of unhappy persons fell vietims to this cruel and absurd delusion. many cities of Germany, the average number of executions for this pretended erime was 600 annually, or two every day, if we leave out the Sundays, when it is to be supposed that even this madness refrained from its work."

WITENAGEMOT, or ASSEMBLY OF THE WISE MEN.—This was the great council of our Anglo-Saxon kings. Instances of its meeting are recorded in the reign of Ina, King of Wessex (633—727). King Alfred (871—901) ordained that it should meet twice in the year, or oftener if needful; and Edward the Elder held one at Exeter in 918. The witenagemot outlawed the family of Godwin, Earl of Kent, in 1043, and restored them in WITEPSK, or VITEBSK (Russia). — The Russians, to the number of 80,000, under Barclay de Tolly, retreated to this place in Russia, on the left bank of the Dwina, July 25, 1812. They broke up their camp within sight of the Freneh army, and commenced their march towards Smolenskow, to effect a junction with Bagration, July 27. The French, having taken possession, were driven out by Wittgenstein, Nov. 7. An engagement between the troops in its neighbourhood, resulting in a loss on each side of 3,000 men, proved rather favourable to the Russians, Nov. 14, 1812.

WITHAM (Essex), believed to have been a Roman station, was fortified by Edward the Elder in 913.

WITNESSES.—By the law of Moses, two, at least, were required to establish a question of fact. A false witness was to suffer the punishment due to the offence of which he made accusation (Deut. xix. 15-19), B.C. 1451. Amongst the Romans and some other nations, it was the custom to cuff witnesses and pull their ears, in order to make them remember their evidence. Witnesses were seldom called at trials in this country, the jurors usually deciding from their own knowledge of the prisoner, and of the facts of the case. The prisoner, and of the facts of the case. The first traces of the present practice in that respect occur about 1349. It was fully estab-lished by the middle of the 15th century. By the ancient practice of most European coun-tries, the evidence of women was inadmissible; and in Switzerland, as late as 1824, the testiand in Switzerland, as late as 1824, the testimony of two women was only considered equivalent to that of one man. Disqualification arising from criminal conviction was removed by Lord Denman's act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), Aug. 22, 1843. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83 (Aug. 20, 1853), husbands and wives are compellable to give evidence for or against each other event in criminal cases. other, except in criminal cases.

WITSAND, or WISSANT (France).-Believed to be the Portus Itius whence Julius Cæsar sailed for the invasion of Britain, B.C. 55. It is supposed to have been near Cape Grisnez, between Calais and Boulogne. Other authorities say Julius Cæsar sailed from Gesoriacum, now Boulogne, Aug. 25, B.C. 55.

WITTEKINDSBURG (Hanover) was made a bishopric by Charlemagne in 783. Osnaburg is supposed to occupy its site.

WITTELSBACH (Germany).—A castle was built at this place in Bavaria, near Augsburg, in 1100. It was destroyed in 1208.

WITTENBERG (Prussia).—The capitulation of Wittenberg, between John Frederick, Elector of Saxony, and Charles V., was signed May 19, 1547, and the town surrendered May 20. It surrendered to the Imperial army Aug. 21, 1759, and having been bombarded by the Imperialists, capitulated Oct. 14, 1760. The Imperialists, capitulated Oct. 14, 1760. WOLLIN (Prussia).—This seaport town of Stettin was in a flourishing condition as early as 776. It received the inhabitants of Wineta, on the destruction of that place in 805, and the bishopric was founded by Otho, Bishop of Bamberg in 1125. Vlademar I. of Denmark

WOLVERHAMPTON (Staffordshire) was called Wulfrune's Hampton, from Wulfruna, sister of King Edgar, who founded a monastery here in 996. It became a collegiate church with a dean and prebendaries, was annexed to Windsor by Edward IV. (1461—83), and abolished in 1846. It received a charter of incorporation in 1847. The free grammar-school was founded by Sir Stephen Jenyns in 1513, and the Bluecoat-school about 1710. St. John's church was erected in 1755; St. George's church in 1830; and the South Staffordshire Hospital, at a cost of £18,000, in 1848. The cemetery was opened in 1851; and the Orphan Asylum was built at a cost of £9,000, in 1854. Agylin was outer at cost of Sagoo, in 1940. Queen Victoria unveiled the statue of Prince Albert Nov. 30, 1866. WOLVES were so numerous in some parts of England that a retreat for passing travellers was erected at a place called Flixton, in the reign of Athelstan (925—940). They were nearly extirpated in the reign of King Edgar (957—75), who imposed an annual tribute of 300 wolves' heads upon Ludwal, Prince of Wales. Sir Evan Cameron killed the last seen in Scotland in 1680. They were extir-pated in Ireland about 1710. (See Georgia, WOMAN.—From the circumstance that the chapters of the Bible which treat of the incidents immediately after the Fall contain scarcely any allusion to women, it has been inferred that the female character was then held in very low estimation. Among the pastoral nations of the primitive ages, women tended the flocks and herds, drew water, and performed other menial offices. The Egyptians treated women with considerable kindness, and employed them in weaving and spinning; and the Jewish law, though severe in the case of female offences, afforded them ample protection, and assigned them an important position in the national and social economy. Smith (Smaller Dictionary of the Bible), referring to the position of woman in the Hebrew common-generally occupies amongst Eastern nations, remarks, - "Rebekah travelled on a eamel with her face unveiled, until she came into the presence of her affianced (Gen. xxiv. 64-5); Jacob saluted Rachel with a kiss in the presence of the shepherds (Gen. xxix. 11). Women played no inconsiderable part in public celebrations (Exod. xv. 20-1; Judg. xi. 34). The odes of Deborah (Judg. v.), and of Hannah (1 Sam. ii. 1, &c.), exhibit a degree of intellectual cultivation which is in itself a proof of the position of the sex in that period. Women occasionally held public offices, particularly that of prophetess, or inspired teacher (Exod. xv. 20; Judg. iv. 4; 2 Kings xxii. 14; Neh. vi. 14; Luke ii. 36). The management of household affairs devolved mainly on the women. The value of a virtuous and active housewife forms a frequent topic in the Book of Proverbs (xi. 16; xii. 4; xiv. 1; xxxi. 10; &c.)." Among the Greeks women were seeluded in private apartments, and were compelled to wear a veil when out of doors. The Romans treated women with great consideration, entrusting to them the education of the young and the control of their household affairs; but in the latter days of the Republic and of the Empire, when morals became corrupt, measures were taken for their restraint. Thus the Lex Oppia imposed sumptuary restrictions; Augustus (B.C. 27-A.D. 14 would not allow them to be present at the public games; and by a law passed in 222, they were formally excluded from the senate. The ancient Germans gave a very high position to the female sex; and Tacitus (61-117) commemorates the excellence of character which their women exhibited. During the Dark Ages the female lot was of course a hard one, the right of free choice in marriage and the advantages of education being totally denied them. The romantic chivalry of the 11th and following centuries introduced a better order of things, and laid the foundation for that recognition of female rights and respect for female excellence which are at once the most powerful agent and the clearest evidence of inodern civilization. The public whipping of women was abolished by 57 Geo. III. c. 75 (July 7, 1817), and the punishment was altogether prohibited in the case isament was attogether profitned in the case of female offenders by 1 Geo. IV. e. 57, (July 15, 1820). By 5 & 6 Viet. c. 99 (Aug. 10, 1842), the employment of women in mines was declared tilegal. A woman's conference was held at Leipsic in Oct., 1865. WONDERS OF THE WORLD.—The seven wonders of the world were,—the Colossus of Rhodes (q, v_*) ; the temple of Diana at Ephesus (q. v.); the tomb of Mausolus (See MAUSOLEUM); the Pyramids (q, v_*) ; the lighthouse on the Pharos (q, v_*) ; the hanging gardens, constructed at Babylon by Queen Semiramis about B.C. 1250; and the colossal statue of Jupiter Olympus, made of ivory and gold, by Phidias (B.C. 490—B.C. 432).

WOODCUTS. — The ancient Egyptians practised the art of engraving on wood for the purpose of producing an impression upon soft clay, and it was known to the Greeks and

Romans. In China woodcuts were used about the 12th century B.C. The earliest in Europe were probably executed at Nuremberg about 1340, and seem to have been applied to the production of playing-cards. The first woodcut with a date (1423) represents St. Chris-topher carrying our Saviour across a river on his shoulders. The Psalter, printed by Faust and Scheffer, at Mentz, in 1457, contains initial letters engraved in wood. Caxton used wood engravings in England about 1476. The improvement known as "cross-hatching" was shown in a work printed at Mentz in 1486. In Germany woodcuts were much used 1486. In Germany woodcuts were much used for illustrating books, although the style of workmanship became much deteriorated between 1545 and 1580. Papillon published his "History of Wood Engraving" in 1723. Wood carving was brought to great perfection in Germany during the Middle Ages, and it was much used in the decoration of churches. WOODS AND FORESTS.—The demesne lands of the erown, terræ dominicales regis, whence is derived one branch of the ordinary revenue of the sovereign, were either reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or came to it afterwards in various ways. William III. (1689-1702) had so reduced their extent by the exercise of his power of alienation, that a civil list was passed by which Queen Anne, in 1702, placed them at the disposal of the Parliament, in return for £700,000 a year (1 Anne, s. 1, c. 7), and a similar arrangement was made at the commencement of each succeeding reign. The office of surveyor-general of his majesty's works was created by 46 Geo. III. c. 142 (1805), and altered by 50 Geo. III. c. 65 (June 9, 1810). (See FORESTS.)

LETTERS. WOODSTOCK (Oxfordshire).-This ancient town derives its name from the forests by which it was surrounded, and was a place of eonsiderable importance during the Saxon period. Ethelred I. (866-871) is said to have held a parliament at Woodstock; and it is believed that Alfred the Great (871-901) resided here while engaged in his translation of Boethius. Henry I. (1100—35), who resided much at this town, formed the first park here in 1123, and held a curia April 10, 1132; and it was the scene of Henry II.'s amour with the fair Rosamond Clifford in 1154. (See Rosamond's Bower.) The same monarch received the homage of Malcolm IV. of Scotland at Woodstock in 1164. Edward the Black Prince was born at Woodstock June 15, 1330. The town received its first charter from Henry VI. in 1453, and was the prison of the Princess Elizabeth in 1555. In 1649 the Rump Parliament appointed a commission for surveying the royal property at Woodstock. Blenheim Palace, the magnificent seat of the Duke of Marlborough, was erected at Woodstock by Sir John Vanbrugh in 1705, and was presented to the duke by the nation. The town-hall was built from the designs of Sir William Chambers in 1766, and the parish church was restored in 1785. A fire, which destroyed the Titian Gallery at Blenheim Palace, broke out

WOOL-COMBERS.—The septennial festival to their patron St. Blase was celebrated at Bradford with great rejoicing, Feb. 3, 1825. This saint, who holds a place in the Church of England calendar, was Bishop of Sebaste, in Armenia, and was tormented with iron combs and martyred under Licinius in 316. WOOLER (Northumberland).—The battles of Hedgley Moor (q, v.) and Homildon Hill (q, v.) were fought in the neighbourhood of this town.

WOOLLEN TRADE AND MANUFAC-TURE.—The woollen manufacture is stated to have originated in Babylouia. The fable of Jason and the Golden Flecce points to its existence in Greece as early as B.C. 1263, and it had attained great excellence in Tyre B.C. 588. Moses prohibited the Jews from wearing clothes woven of wool and linen together, B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxii. 11). England has been celebrated for its woollen goods from the earliest periods, and Winchester was noted for its woollen manufactures during the Roman occupation. It is said to have been practised in France as early as 960. The worsted manufacture was established at Worstead, in Norfolk, by a colony of Flemish settlers, in 1327; and Edward III. greatly encouraged the woollen trade by receiving John Kemp, and 70 families of Walloon weavers, from Flanders, in 1331. The exportation was first prohibited by 11 Edw. III. c. 1 (1337). Many improvements in the manufacture of wbollen goods were introduced by refugees from Holland in 1420, and English sheep were exported to Spain in 1464. The mart of English cloths was estab-lished at Calais in 1493. A large number of woollen workers from France and Flanders woollen workers from France and Flancers settled in England in 1563, and further measures were taken for the prohibition of the export of wool. Several English manufacturers emigrated, and established an important trade at Leyden and Alkmaar in 1636. In order to encourage the woollen trade of England, it was ordered by 18 Charles II. c. 4 (1666), that all corpses should be buried in woollen shrouds. (See Burial.) The exportation of English wool was again prohibited, and the importation of Irish wool into this country was permitted, by 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 18 (1696). The first machine for spinning wool was invented by John Wyatt about 1733. Lewis Paul's carding-machine was patented Aug. 30, 1748, and Hargreaves made his first spinning-jenny in 1767. Arkwright's machine was invented about 1768. The first importation of wool into England took place in 1770, and merino sheep (q. v.) were first brought into the country in 1788. Dr. Edmund Cartwright's combing-machine was patented in 1792, and in consequence of the number of wool-combers thus thrown out of employment, measures were adopted by 35 Geo. III. c. 124 (June 26, 1795), for enabling them to exercise other trades. Alpaca sheep were first exhibited in this country in 1811. (See ALPACA.) Several teazling-machines, composed of metallic wires, were patented in France in 1818. All the acts prohibiting the exportation of wool were repealed by 5 Geo. IV. c. 47 (June 3, 1824). John Platt's combing-machine was patented in Nov., 1827, James Noble's in Feb., 1834, and Ross's improvements March 13, 1851. Customs duties on wool are mentioned by 51 Hen. III. st. 5, c. 6 (1266). A tax was imposed on exported woollen goods by 12 Charles II. c. 4 (1660). It was removed by 11 & 12 Will. III. c. 20 (1700). (See CLOTH, KNITTING, STAPLE, &c.)

WOOLWICH (Kent).—The dockyard was established in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47). The Henry Grace à Dieu, the largest ship of the period, named after Henry VIII., built here in 1515, was burned in 1553. The Sovereign of the Seas, of 100 guns, called the Golden Devil by the Dutch, was also built here in 1637. The arsenal was established in 1716: the Royal Military Academy was founded in 1719; and the present building was erected from the plans of Sir Jeffrey Wyatville, at a cost of £150,000, in 1805. The church of St. Mary Magdalen was built in 1740, and St. John's church in 1840. The Royal Laboratory was formed early in the 19th century.

WORCESTER (Battle).—Charles II. was crowned at Scone, in Scotland, Jan. 1, 1651, and marched into England from Stirling July 31, with an army of 14,000 men, arriving at Worcester Aug. 22. He was pursued by Cromwell, who defeated his army near Worcester, Wednesday, Sep. 3, 1651 (O.S.). The king escaped in disguise, and after several hairbreadth escapes, arrived at Fécamp Oct. 16. Many of his followers were sold as slaves, and sent to Africa and America, some of them being compelled to work in the mines of

Guinea. (See Boscobel.)
WORCESTER (Bishopric).—This diocese was separated from Lichfield about 680.—By an order in council of Dec. 22, 1836, the archdeaconry of Coventry was transferred from Coventry and Lichfield to Worcester, and the parish of Shenington, in Gloucestershire, was also annexed to it, July 19, 1837. Gloucester (q, v) was separated from Worcester by charter, Sep. 3, 1541.

WORCESTER (Worcestershire), the chief town of the county, founded by the Saxons in 680, was destroyed by the Danes, and rebuilt in 894. It was plundered by Hardicanute in 1041. The barons of Hereford occupied it to 1041. The barons of Hereford occupied it to quell a conspiracy against William I. in 1074. Bernard Neumarck failed in an attempt to take it in 1088. It was plundered by the troops of Henry III. in 1216, on account of a revolt of the inhabitants. A grand tournament held here in 1225 drew down upon the jousters an excommunication from Bishop Blois. A council was held here July 26, 1240. The city was captured by the rebel barons in 1263. In the civil wars it was taken by Prince Rupert, who defeated a party of Parliamentary horse under Col. Sandys, Sep. 25, 1642. The Earl of Essex recovered it the same year. Charles II. entered the city Aug. 22, 1651, and Cromwell stormed the forts and defeated the Royalists Sep. 3. Cromwell's troops stabled their horses in the cathedral. The last of the six gates of the city was removed in 1787. The eathedral was rebuilt by Bishop Oswald in 983, and by Bishop Wulfstan in 1084. It was repaired and reconsecrated in Jan., 1281, and underwent alterations and repairs in 1830. The bridge across the Severn was built in 1780. The remains of a Franciscan monastery were removed in 1823. (See PORCELAIN.)

WORCESTER COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded by Sir Thomas Cookes, Bart., in 1714: The chapel, hall, and library were commenced The new buildings on the north side of the inner court were completed in 1776, and the hall in 1784.

WORKHOUSE.—By 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25 (1536), the able-bodied poor were directed to be kept to constant labour. Edward VI. founded the royal hospital of Bridevell in 1553, for the punishment and employment of the vigorous and idle. By 43 Eliz. c. 2 (1601), work was ordered to be provided by the overseers for the poor. By 59 Geo. III. c. 12 [1819], known as Sturges Bourne's act, parishes were empowered to enlarge or build workhouses where none existed before. Their government was vested in a board of guardians, subject to the control of the Poor Law Board, by 4 & 5

Will. IV. e. 76 (Aug. 14, 1834).
WORKING MEN'S CLUBS AND INSTITUTES.—A Working Men's Society for Mutual Improvement was formed in Yeovil in 1842, and a Working Men's Institute at Cheltenham in 1849. Similar institutions have since been established in various parts of the kingdom, and at the meeting of the Social Science Congress, held at Dublin in 1861, a paper on this subject by the Rev. H. Solly was read. The Working Men's Club and Institute Union was formed June 14, 1862. A conference to discuss various questions connected with these useful institutions was held at the Whittington Club

WORMS (Edict of) .- This document, drawn up by Alexander, the papal legate, Sunday, May 26, 1521, declared Luther a heretic, and decreed that whoever sheltered him, printed or published his books, or bought or read them, should be outlawed. It was antedated May 8, in order that it might appear to have the sanction of all present at the diet at Worms, whereas several had left before it was prepared. The diet of Nuremberg in 1523, and again in 1524, ordered the edict of Worms to be enforced, and demanded a general eouncil. The diet of Spires, in 1529, ordered it to be strictly enforced in countries in which it had been received. (See AUGSBURG DIET, PROTESTANTS, &c.)

WORMS (Germany), occupying the site of the Roman Borbetomagus, or Augusta Vangionum, was plundered by the Alemanni in 354, and destroyed by Attlia in 451. Clovis I. rebuilt it about 475. The legislative assemblies of Charlemague, called Mai Lager from the month when they met, were held here. A council elected Leo IX, pope in Dec., 1048, and another deposed Gregory, VII, in Jan. 1076. another deposed Gregory VII. in Jan., 1076. By a concordat between Henry V. and Callixtus II., signed at another council here Sep. 8, 1122, the Emperor lost some of his control over ecclesiastical appointments. The cathedral, commenced in the 8th century, was completed in 1110. Councils were held here in Lent, set an irid. Coulons were near near in Lenk, 88; May 16, 868; in Dec., 1048; in Jan., 1076; Sep. 8, 1122; in April, 1127; and at Pentecost, 1153. The marriage of Isabella, sister of Henry III. of England, with Frederick II., Emperor of Germany, was solemnized here July 20, 1235. The Emperor Adolphus of Nassau was slain at Rosenthal, between Worms and Spiers, in an engagement with Albert of Austria, July 2, 1298. Diets were frequently held here, and at one in 1495, the Landfriedo (q. v.), a perpetual public peace, was established. Luther appeared before the diet here April 17, 1521, and was excommunicated April 11. 19. He quitted Worms April 26. (See WART-BURG.) By order of Louis XIV., Worms was burned in 1689. George II. of England fixed his head-quarters in the episcopal palace Aug. 27, 1743. The city was taken by the French, under Custine, in Oct., 1792, and again in 1793.

WORSTED acquired its name from the town of Worstead, in Norfolk, where a settlement of Flemings introduced woollen manufactures in 1327. The trade was removed to Norwich in the reign of Richard II. (1377—99).

WORTIHES (The Nine) are Joshua, Gideon,
Samson, David, Judas Maccabæus, Alexander the Great, Julius Cassar, Charlemagne, and Godfrey of Bouillon. Authorities are not agreed respecting the last mentioned. Richard or Robert Burton (an assumed name for Nath, Crouch), in his "Hist, of the Nine Worthies," published in 1687, gives three Gentiles, viz., Hector, Alexander the Great, and Julius Cæsar; three Jews, viz., Joshua, David, and Judas Maccabæus; and three Christians, viz., Arthur, Charlemagne, and Godfrey of Bouillon. Shakespeare (Love's Labour's Lost, act v. sc. 2) Shakespeare (Love's Labour's Lost, act v. sc. 2) introduces only five in the pageant of the Nine Worthies, viz., Pompey, Alexander, Judas Maceabæus, Hercules, and Hector. Richard Johnson published the "Nine Worthies of London" in 1592. Thomas Heywood, in 1640, published "The Exemplary Lives and Memorable Acts of Nine the most Worthy Women of the World." This author enumerates them thus,—three Jewesses, viz., Deborah, Judith, and Esther; three Gentiles, viz., Boadicea, Peuthisilea, and Artemisia; and three Christians, viz., Elphleda, Margaret, Queen of Henry VI., and Queen Elizabeth of England.

WOUNDING .- (See MAIMING.)

WRECKS.—Among the early Greeks and Romans, shipwrecked mariners, of whatever nation, were regarded as enemies, and as such were usually put to death or sold into slavery; but the Pandects (q. v.), published in Dec., 533, made the murder of them a capital crime, and imposed severe penalties on thefts from wrecks. On the subversion of the Roman power, the old barbarous customs were restored, and the majority of such as suffered shipwreck were doomed to a life of slavery. Goods washed on shore were adjudged to belong to the king or to the lord of the manor; and it was no uncommon circumstance for pilots and landowners to enter into collusion, whereby ships were purposely run ashore for the sake of their plunder; and the sailors barbarously murdered on the beach to prevent the assertion of their rights. The Oléron Laws (q. v.) enacted that in such case the pilot should suffer as a robber; that the lord should be bound in the centre of his house, which was to be ignited at its four corners, and be left to perish; and that common wreckers, after being half-drowned in the sea, should suffer death by stoning. The English law regarded wrecks as royal property. In the time of Henry I. (1100-35) it was enacted that when any passenger or seaman survived the loss of the ship, it should not be regarded as a wreck; and in the reign of Henry III. (1216—72) it was ruled that goods so marked as to be clearly identified might be recovered by their owners within a year and a day after the wreck. By 27 Edw. III. c. 13 (1353), goods washed ashore from wrecks were to be delivered to the merchants, who were to pay a reasonable salvage for their preservation. These regulations proved ineffectual, and wrecking continued on the English coasts until a comparatively recent period. By 12 Anne, stat. 2, c. 18 (1713), the chief authorities of seaside towns were ordered to assist ships in distress under forfeiture of £100; and by 26 Geo. III. c. 19 (1785), the prevention of the escape of shipwrecked persons, the wounding of such as had reached the shore, or the exhibition of false lights in order to decoy vessels into danger, were made capital felonies. vessels into danger, were made capital retones. The laws relating to shipwrecks were consolidated by 9 & 10 Vict. c. c. (Aug. 12, 1846), and by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 124 (Aug. 12, 1854). A list of disasters at sea will be found in the index, under "Wrecks." (See LIGHTHOUSE, ROYAL NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION, &c.)

WRIT DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO, consigning heretics to the flames, is said to be as ancient as the common law itself. By 5 Rich. II. st. 2, c. 5 (1381), unlicensed preachers or Lollards were ordered to be imprisoned till they justified themselves "according to the law and reason of Holy Church;" and by 2 Hen. IV. c. 15 (1401), persons accused of heretical opinions were to be burned unless they recanted. A similar act was passed in Scotland in 1425. It was abolished by 29 Charles II. c. 9, s. 1 (1676). (See HERETICS, PARLIAMENT, &c.)

WRITING.—Some traditions attribute the origin of writing to Seth, the son of Adam, and others to Enoch. It was most probably known in the antediluvian period. The remains of the Chaldean temple towers have inscriptions which show that the art of writing was known to that nation. Other authorities consider the system of hieroglyphics (q.v.), which was invented by Athotes, or Thoth, about B.C. 2122, as the most ancient mode of writing. It is first mentioned in the Old Testament, Exod. xvii. 14. According to the legend related by Pliny (vii. 56), Cadmus carried a knowledge of letters from Phenicia to Greece, B.C. 1550. The Pelasgi are said to have introduced writing into Italy about B.C. 1476. The Romans practised running-hand as early as the 4th century, and introduced a knowledge of writing into their provinces; but it was not much known in Britain until the end of the 6th century. Writing became an ordinary branch of education during the 14th century. (See ALPHA-BET, CALIGRAPHY, and ILLUMINATION.)

WROEITES, or CHRISTIAN ISRAELITES, called Beardies, from wearing their hair uncut and unshaven, are the followers of John Wroe, who died at Collingwood, Melbourne, Australia, Feb. 6, 1863. According to a communication in Notes and Queries (3rd Series, vol. v. p. 493), they arose about 1823, and are "zcalous and incessant street preachers of an incoherent and unintelligible doctrine, apparently compounded of Judaism, Christianity, and the principles of the Adamites of Munster." Their manual is "The Life and Journal of John Wroe, with Divine Communications to him: being the Visitation of the Spirit of God to warn Mankind that the Day of the Lord is at hand, &c. 2 Vols. Printed for the Trustees of the Society by W. Deane. 1859."

WÜRTEMBERG, or WIRTEMBERG (Germany) was overrun in the 4th century by the Alemanni, who occupied that part afterwards called Swabia, and were conquered by the Franks under Clovis I. in 496. Eberhard V., called the Bearded and the Pious, was created duke by the Emperor Maximilian I., July 21, 1494. It underwent various vicissitudes during the Thirty Years' war, and the peace of Westphalia restored the reigning family, Oct. 24, 1648. It was entered by the armies of France, when the duke purchased peace by the payment of 8,000,000 of francs and the cession of territory, Feb. 9, 1801. It was raised to an electorate by the German diet in 1803, and the elector assumed the title of king, Jan. 1, 1806. Censorship of the press was abolished March 1, 1848. Na-tional assemblies, convoked to revise the constitution of Sep. 25, 1819, were dissolved without effecting their object in 1849 and 1850. A treaty was concluded with Prussia Aug. 13, 1866.

WÜRTZCHEN (Germany).—A battle between the French army, under Napoleon I., and that of the Allics, commanded by the sovereigns of Russia and Prussia, was fought in the neighbourhood of this town, in Saxony, May 19, 1813. A general engagement at the willage of Bautzen (q, v.) terminated favour-ably for the French, May 21, and the conflict having been renewed at Wirtzchen, the Allies were forced to retire, May 22.

feated the Bavarians near this place in Bavaria

WURZBURG (Bavaria) .- St. Kilian is said to have suffered martyrdom here in 689, and it was created a bishopric in 741. The Emperor Henry II., wishing to found another bishopric at Bamberg in 1006, was opposed by the bishop of this city. The Duke of Bayaria besieged it in 1086. A council was held here in 1080. A confederation of the Roman Catholic princes of Germany met here, and elected Maximilian, Duke of Bavaria, their leader, in 1610. The cathedral, founded in the 8th century, was dedicated in 1189, and much altered in 1240. The Neumünster ehureh was founded in the 11th century, and the Marien-Kirche was built between 1377 and 1479. The university, established in 1403, was renewed in 1582. The royal, formerly the episcopal palace, was built between 1720 and 1744. The town, taken by the Swedes under Gustavus II. (Adolphus) in 1630, and by the French in 1793, was surrendered by the prince bishop to the French, July 25, 1796. Under Jourdan they sustained a severe defeat from the Archduke Charles in the neighbourhood, and the place afterwards surrendered to the Austrians, Sep. 3, 1796. It was besieged by the French in 1800; secularized and ceded to Bavaria Feb. 5, 1803; surrendered to the Allies March 21, 1814; and restored to Bavaria in 1815. A general meeting of the Roman Catholic Associations of Germany of the Roman Catholic Associations of Germany met here Sep. 13—15,1864. The town was bombarded by the Prussians after the battle of Wurzburg (q. v.), July 27, 1866, and an armistice was concluded here Aug. 1.

WURZEN, or WURTZEN (Germany).—The cathedral at this town of Saxony, founded in 1114, was restored in 1818. The bishop's see was annexed to Leipsic in 1661.

WYATTS INSURRECTION.—Sir. Thomas

WYATT'S INSURRECTION. -Sir Thomas Wyatt, a Kentish gentleman, joined with others, in Nov., 1553, to prevent the marriage of Queen Mary with Philip of Spain. The Duke of Suffolk, who joined him, failed in an attempt to raise troops in Leicester Jan. 29, 1554, and was soon after imprisoned in the Tower. Wyatt collected about 2,000 followers, and fortified himself at Rochester, Jan. 26, and a number of the troops brought by the Duke of Norfolk to attack him went over to his side Jan. 29. He reached Deptford Feb. 1, and entered Southwark, plundered the palace of the Bishop of Winchester, but could not effect the passage of London Bridge, Feb. not enect the passage of London Bridge, Feb., 3. Having withdrawn from Southwark Feb. 6, he marched to Kingston, and, crossing the Thames there, reached London Feb. 7. Numbers of his followers deserted, and he surrendered, after a skirmish at Temple Bar, to Sir Maurice Berkelcy. He was conveyed to the Tower, pleaded guilty to his indictment March 15, and was beheaded April 11. About so of his followers were executed between Feb. 13 and 26. Upwards of 400 were brought with halters round their necks to the Queen Mary at Westminster, Feb. 20, and set at

WYCLIFFITES, or WICKLIFFITES, the followers of John Wycliffe, Fellow of Merton, born in 1324, known as the Evangelical Doctor, were also called Gospellers. Wycliffe Doctor, were and cannot despend as ween denounced the avarice of ecclesiastics in a treatise entitled "The Last Age of the Church," published in 1356; took part with the university of Oxford against the Mendicants in 1360; and supported Edward III, in 1370 in refusing to pay the tribute promised to the Pope by King John. Wycliffe went to Rome in 1374, as one of the seven ambassadors appointed to confer with the Papal Commissioners respecting the grievances in the English Church, and the meeting took place at Bruges. The monks having selected 19 propositions from his sermons and lectures. founded upon them a charge of heresy, which they sent to Rome in 1376, and Gregory XI. issued a bull ordering him to be imprisoned and brought to trial; and Wycliffe appeared before the commissioners, wychne appeared before the commissioners, Feb. 19, 1377. He established a society of itinerant preachers, called Lollards (q, v_*) , in 1379, undertook the translation of the Bible (q, v_*) into English in 1380, and opposed the doctrine of Transubstantiation in 1381, for which he was censured by the Chancellor of Oxford. By 5 Rich. II. st. 2, c. 5 (1381), unlicensed preachers or Lollards were ordered to be imprisoned until they justified them-selves "according to the law and reason of Holy Church." Some of his opinious were Holy Church." Some of his opinions were condemned as heretical by Courtenay, Archbishop of Canterbury, at a council held in London in May 1382. Wycliffe quitted Oxford, and retired to the rectory of Lutterworth, which had been given him in 1376. Here he translated the Bible, and died Dec. 31, 1384. His doctrincxwere condemned by course in him to the council of the cils in London Feb. 19, 1397, and July 23, 1408, and a papal bull issued in 1409 ordered his writings to be seized, and all persons who professed the heretical opinions to be tried. The Wyeliffites were severely persecuted in 1414, and the Council of Constance condemned Wycliffe's writings, and ordered his remains to be dug up and scattered on the dunghill, May 2, 1415. Reginald Pecock, Bishop of Chichester, was in 1458 deposed for holding these opinions. The work thus commenced in England was continued in Germany. Jerome of Prague returned to his native city from Oxford, and in 1402 began to spread the views of Wycliffe, which were formally condemned by the university of Prague in 1404. About this time John Huss, preacher at the Bethlehem Chapel, at Prague, became acquainted with the writings of Wycliffe, and began to advocate his opinions. Sbinko, Archbishop of Prague, burned the writings of Wycliffe in 1410, and denounced John Huss to the Pope as one of his followers. The attempts to silence Huss proved ineffectual, and in 1414 he repaired to Constance, under a safe conduct from the Emperor Sigismund, to appear before the general council there. In spite of the protection promised, he was arrested Nov. 28, 1414, tried, and condemned to be burned, the sentence being executed July 7, 1415. Jerome of Prague, alarmed at the fate of his associate, said to have recanted Sep. 23, 1415, revoked his forced recantation May 30, 1416, and was also burned alive. (See Hussites.)

XALAPA, or JALAPA (Mexico), the chief town of a department of the same name, is a favourite resort of the inhabitants of Vera Cruz. The old church is said to have been founded by Cortes (1520—47). The creeping plant Jalap grows in the neighbourhood, and receives its name from this place. Bustaments published what was called the plan of Xalapa argainst the President Guerrero, Dec. 4, 1820.

XANTEN, or SANTEN (Germany).— This town in Prussia, near Cleves, is supposed to occupy the site of Castra Vetera, or Vetera, formed by Germanicus, about 14, and captured by Civilis in 69. The Romans defeated Civilis here later in the year. The treaty which terminated the war respecting the succession of Juliers was concluded at this place in 1614. It was taken by the French in 1672.

XANTHIAN MARBLES, consisting of seulptural remains ranging from B.C. 545, discovered in the mines of Xanthus by Sir Charles Fellowes, were brought to England in 1842-3. They are deposited in the Lycian Gallery at the British Museum.

XANTHICA.—This festival, observed during the month Xanthicus, the 6th of the Macedonian year, corresponding to April, was the annual occasion for the lustration or purification of the Macedonian army, and comprised a sham fight and other solemnities.

XANTHUS (Asia Minor), the capital of Lycia, was besieged by Harpagus B.C. 545, in the reign of Cyrus the Elder, when the inhabitants perished, with all that they possessed, in the ruins of their city. It was rebuilt, and during the Roman civil war was taken by Brutus, B.C. 42. The inhabitants, who refused to submit, perished in the flames. The village of Koonik stands near the site.

XATIVA, or JATIVA (Spain).—The ancient Sætabis, or Sctabis, taken from the Almoravides by Abu Abdelmelik in 1145, surrendered to James I. of Aragon in 1246. It received the name of Jativa for opposing Philip V, by whose army it was taken and destroyed in 1707. It was rebuilt under the name of Sem Falire.

XERXES' EXPEDITION. — The Persian monarch, having resolved to subdue Greece, commenced his preparations B.C. 483. Three years were occupied in collecting troops and provisions. A canal was ordered to be cut through Mount Athos for the passage of the ships, and a bridge for the army to be thrown across the Hellespont. This immense army, amounting, according to Herodotus, to 1,800,000 men, set out from Sardis, where it had wintered, B.C. 480. Various cities submitted to the invader. The pass of Thermopylæ was defended by Leonidas and 300 Spartans, who perished to a man, Aug. 7—9, B.C. 480. Beedia and Attica were ravaged, Athens was sacked, and Delphos attacked. The Persians, victorious after a severe contest at Artemistum (q. v.), were defeated at Salamis (q. v.) in Dec., B.C. 480. Xerxes I. retreated into Asia, leaving his army under the command of Mardonius, who was defeated in Sep., B.C. 479, at Platæa (q. v.) and at Mycale (q. v.), on the same day. Mardonius fell at Platæa, and Xerxes I. was assassinated by Artabanus B.C.

XIMENA (Spain) was taken from the Moors in 1456, by Don Henry, who put all the inhabitants to the sword.—The French, commanded by Regnier, were defeated near this town by the Spaniards under Ballasteros, Sep. 10, 1811.

YACHTING became popular in England early in the 17th century. Phineas Pett built a yacht for Henry, Prince of Wales, in 1604. The Royal Cork Club, originally called the Cork Harbour Water Club, the oldest yacht club in the kingdon, was established before 1720. The yacht club founded in 1815 received the name of the Royal Vacht Saudesn in 1825. the name of the Royal Yacht Squadron in 1833. The Royal Thames Yacht Club was founded in 1823. The yacht race across the Atlantic for 90,000 dollars was won by the Henrietta, which reached Cowes Dec. 25, 1866, having made the passage from New York in 14 days 4 hours.

YANKEE.—This term, applied to the people of the United States, is considered to be a corruption of the Indian pronunciation of "English." They called them Yenghees, and the term Yankee was applied to the people of

New England about 1775. YAR D.—Sir Henry Spelman (1562—1641) says that a new standard of longitudinal measure was ascertained by Henry I. (1100—35), who commanded that the ancient ell should be made of the exact length of his own arm.

YARMOUTH, or GREAT YARMOUTH (Norfolk), was, according to Domesday Book, a royal demesne in 1086. A charter of Henry III. gave permission to fortify the town, which was done by constructing a moat, and a wall with 10 gates and 16 towers. It was made one of the chief naval stations in 1294, and is mentioned as a great seat of the herring fishery in 1357. The town was attacked by the insurgents 1357. The town was attacked by the insurgence during Ket's rebellion in 1549. A fortress with four towers was erected in anticipation of the Spanish invasion in 1588. William III., on his return from Holland, landed here Oct. 18, 1692. St. Nicholas's church was founded in the beginning ning of the 12th century, St. George's was built in 1716, and St. Peter's in 1833. Nelson's monument, 140 feet high, was erected in 1817. It appears, therefore, that two calculations have generally existed in England for the commencement of the year; viz.-1. The Historical year, which has, for a viz.—1. The Historical year, which has, for a very long time, begun on the rst of January; and 2. the Civil, Ecclesiastical, and Legal year, which was used by the Church, and in all public instruments, until the end of the 13th century, began at Christmas. In and after the 14th century, it commenced on the 25th of March, and so continued until the 1st of January, 1752." This led to great confusion. Charles I, is said by those authorities who use the Historical way to have been believed. the Historical year to have been beheaded Jan. 30, 1649, whilst by those writers who computed by the Civil, Ecclesiastical, or Legal year, the date is assigned to Jan. 30, 1648. The date of any event that happened between Jan. 1 and March 25 was, in order to avoid confusion, frequently written thus:—

The absence of leaven constituted the requirements tuted the peculiarity of the bread used in the passover B.C. 1491 (Exod. xii. 15); and it was always omitted in bread intended for immediate use. The Faculty of Medicine of Paris reported against the use of yeast, as prejudicial to health, March 24, 1688.

YELLOW FEVER. — The history of this scourge of the southern parts of North America is involved in obscurity. Dr. Bas-combe, in his treatise on the "Nature and Cause of Yellow Fever," denies that it is of modern origin, and states that it raged in Spain as carly as B.C. 1100. He also regards the pestilence which ravaged England in 664 as the true yellow fever; and he mentions a deadly outbreak of the same disease which occurred in the fleet of Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Somers during its voyage to Virginia in 1608. YEMEN (Arabia Felix).—The expedition of Alius Gallus, in the reign of Augustus (B.C. 31-A.D. 14) is by some authorities supposed to have penetrated as far as this region, which was restored to the Homerites and made tributary to Persia in 570. A brother of Saladin conquered it, and established the dynasty of the Curds, or Ayoubites, in 1173. It was taken by the lieutenant of Soliman I. in 1538, and again by Selim II. in 1568. The Turks were expelled from Yemen in 1630. Abou Nokta plundered a number of its towns in YENIKALE (Sea of Azoff) .- The straits of Yenikale were forced by the allied fleets, May 25, 1855. Above 15,000,000 roubles have been expended upon the fortifications since the close of the Russian war (q. v.).

YEOMEN OF THE GUARD. - Henry VII. in 1485 founded the yeomen of the guard (vulgarly called "beef-eaters," a corruption of buffetiers, from their having been stationed at the buffet, or sideboard, during state banquets), for 50 men upwards of six feet in height and a captain. The number was, however, speedily raised to about 200; but no settled standard existed till 1668, when Charles II. fixed it at 100, of whom six were called yeomen-hangers, because it was their business to superintend the hanging of the tapestry in the royal apartments; and two yeomen-bedgoers, because to them was entrusted the arrangements of the beds during royal progresses. YEW-TREE.-The wood of this tree was used in the manufacture of bows by the ancient Greeks and Romans, who were also acquainted with the poisonous nature of the juices of the yew. The custom of planting the tree in churchyards is variously explained as a remnant of Druidical superstition; as a means of sheltering the church from winds, &c.; as affording a supply of the evergreens so frequently used by our forefathers in ecclesiastical festivals; and for the sake of the wood, which was the best adapted for making bows. Caxton, in his "Directory for the Festivals," published in 1483, refers to the yew as a substitute used in England for palms on Palm Sunday (q, v.). Shakespeare, in the comedy of "Twelfth Night" (act ii. sc. 4), written in 1600, alludes to "My shroud of white, stuck all with yew." The custom of clipping the yew into fantastic forms as a garden tree prevailed between the reigns of Charles I. and William III. (1625—89). Canada or North American yew was introduced into this country in 1800. YEZD.—(See GUEBRES.)

YEZDEGIRD, or PERSIAN ÆRA, commenced on the accession of Yezdegird III. to the throne of Persia, June 16, 632. The error in the calendar was rectified by Sultan Jelaledin in 1075. YOKE.—Yokes of iron are mentioned by Mosos B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxviii. 43), and it is believed that such were actually used by slaves during the Scriptural period. The ancients regarded it as a symbol of slavery, and it was customary for vanquished armies to pass under a yoke, formed like a gallows, of two upright spears, and a third fixed transversely at top. The Samnites exacted this mark of submission from the Romans after their victory at the Caudine Forks, B.C. 321; and were themselves compelled to undergo the same humiliation B.C. 307 and

Bird were treacherously murdered, whilst on an excursion to the temple of Kamakura, about 17 miles from this port, Nov. 20, 1864. Twothirds of the native town, and about one-sixth of the foreign settlement, were destroyed by fire, Nov. 26, 1866. YORK (Archbishopric).—St. Lucius, King of the Britons, is said to have established an archbishopric at York as early as 180. The names of only four of the ancient bishops are recorded, and the see became extinct. It was revived by Edwin, King of Northumbria, about 622, and conferred upon Paulinus April 27, 627. On the death of this primate, the Northumbrians relapsed into idolatry, and the see remained vacant until 664, from which year the succession remains unbroken. The see of Lindisfarne, merged in that of York in 664, was again separated in 678. The supremacy of Canterbury to York was decreed by the Anglican council of 1072. The metropolitan see of York originally exercised jurisdiction over the Scotch bishops; but this power was abolished in 1466. By an order in council Aug. 21, 1837, the entire county of Nottingham was separated from York, and annexed to was separated from fork, and annexed to Canterbury. The province comprises the sees of York, Carlisle, Chester, Durham, Manchester, Ripon, and Sodor and Man.

After living in retirement for three years, she died May 10, 1775, in her 24th year, and was interred in the sepulchre of her maternal ancestors, the dukes of Zell. A treaty between the Duke of Brunswick, Germany, Spain, and Holland, was concluded at Zell June 20, 1674, and another, between Brunswick and Sweden, Feb. 5, 1679.

ZENDECAN (Battle). - The Ghiznevides were defeated by the Turkomans at this place, in Khorassan, and the dynasty of the shepherd kings founded in Persia, in 1038. ZENO.—The Stoics (q. v.) were sometimes called the sect of Zeno from their founder.

ZENTA .- (See SZENTA.)

ZEPHANIAH (Book of), the ninth in order of the minor prophets, was written by Zephaniah, the son of Cush, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, about

B.C. 627. ZEPHYRIA.—(See Halicarnassus.) ZERBI .- (See GERBI.)

ZERNAGORA .- (See Montenegro.)

ZETUNIUM (Battle).—The Emperor Basil II. defeated the army of Samuel, King of Bulgaria, at this place, July 29, 1014. The victor took 15,000 prisoners, whose eyes he ordered to be put out, leaving only a single eye to one man in every 100, to enable them to regain their homes. On hearing of this infamous outrage, Samuel fell senseless to the ground, and expired two days after.

ZINC was unknown to the Greeks, Romans, or Arabians, although the ore calamine was probably employed in making brass in the 5th century. Albertus Magnus, in the 13th century, showed that furnace calamine might be used for this purpose. This application was also pointed out by Erasmus Ebener, of Nuremberg, about 1548. Artificial white vitriol was an article of commerce about 1570, before it was known that it was procured from zinc. The name zinc first occurs in Paracelsus, who described it in 1530. kel procured it from calamine, and published his success in 1741. In England it was pro-bably manufactured in that way as early as

Works for its manufacture were established at Bristol by Champion in 1743. greater part of the metal used in Europe was brought from the East Indics, the Commercial Company of the Netherlands having sold nearly 1,000,000 lb. between 1775 and 1779.

ZION.—The hill at Jerusalem on which the temple stood was called Mount Zion. A fortress crected here by the Syrians, was captured and destroyed in May, B.C. 142. (See Mormonites.) ZIPANGU.—(See JAPAN.) ZIRCONIUM.—This rare metal, which has resisted all attempts at fusion, was discovered by Berzelius in 1824.

ZNAIM, or ZNAYM (Armistice), concluded at this place between Napoleon I. and the Archduke Charles of Austria, July 11, 1809, a few days after the battle of Wagram. It led to the peace of Schönbrunn.

ZNAIM, or ZNAYM (Austria). — The Emperor Sigismund died at this town, in Moravia, Dec. 9, 1437. A drawn battle between the French and the Austrians was fought here,

July 10, 1809. ZOBAH.—(See NISIBIS.) ZODIAC .- It is believed that the ancient Babylonians divided the zodiac into 12 signs. distinguished by the names of different animals; and a similar arrangement was adopted by the Egyptians, Greeks, and Orientals. Anaximander of Miletus is said to have constructed a dial representing the signs of the zodiac about B.C. 600, and Aratus, who wrote an astronomical poem about B.C. 270, describes the zodiac. The practice of decorating ceilings, &c., with representations of the zodiacal'signs, was common in ancient Egypt and Rome. The phenomenon of the zodiacal light was first observed by Descartes and Childrey, and was named by the elder Cassini in 1683. It was first observed in England in Essex, by Derham, April 3, 1707. ZOLLERN.--(See HOHENZOLLERN.)

ZOLLVEREIN, or CUSTOMS UNION .-The idea of a uniform system of customs for the German states, first suggested at the congress of Vienna in 1815, was acted upon by the government of Prussia, which abolished all distinctions of customs throughout its territories, May 26, 1818, and invited other governments to unite for a similar purpose. The invitation was generally accepted, and the result was the formation of the Zollverein, or customs union of the German states, by a treaty signed March 22, 1833. Saxony Joined the union March 30, Thuringia May 11, and the uniformity of customs thus introduced commenced Jan. 1, 1834. Treaties of commerce between Austria and the Zollverein. and Italy and the Zollvercin, were signed Dec. 31, 1865. ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS (London), in the Regent's Park, were laid out in 1825, and the Zoological Gardens in the Surrey Gardens in 1831. The latter were converted to other purposes in 1856. ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—The Zoological Society of London was founded by Sir Humphry Davy, Sir Stamford Raffles, and other eminent men, in 1826. The Cuvierian Society of Paris was instituted in 1738.

ZOOLOGY,—Aristotle wrote his "History of Animals" about B.C. 334. The first European work in any department of this science worthy of notice is Turner's "History of Birds," published at Cologne in 1548. Courad Gesner's "History of Animals," considered by Cuvier as the basis of modern zoology, was published between 1551 and 1587. A history of fishes in Latin, from the pen of Belon, the traveller, appeared in 1539. Ichthyology was treated of by Rondelet in 1554-5, and by Salviani 1554-8. Aldrovandus, professor of natural history at Bologna, produced a work on the subject in 13 volumes, nine of which were subject in 13 volumes, nine of which were published after his death, which occurred in 1605. The last, on cloven-hoofed quadrupeds, appeared in 1642. The animals of Brazil were described by Maregraf in 1648. Jonston, a Pole, produced a natural history 1648–1652. A work on insects, by Mouffet, an English physician, appeared in 1634. Ray, the first zoologist who made use of comparative anatomy, wrote on the subject in various departtomy, wrote on the stoject in various departments between 1676 and 1693. Swammerdam, a Dutch naturalist, published a general history of insects in 1660. Baron Cuvier, conjointly with M. Geoffroy, issued a new classification of mammiferous animals in 1797, and published his "Animal Kingdom" in 1817. (See LINNÆAN SYSTEM and NATURAL

ZORNDORF (Battle).—The Russians, 50,000 strong, commanded by Marshal Fermor, were attacked, Aug. 25, 1758, at this village in Prussia, by the Prussians under Frederick II. The Russians lost nearly 20,000 and the Prussians 12,000 men, and no decisive advantage was achieved on either side.

ZOUAVES .- A Kabyle or primitive Berber people, inhabiting a mountainous district between Bougie and Dellis, in Algeria, known as the Gaouaoua, or D'Ait-Gaoua, are also ealled Zouaouas; whence the term Zouave. Max Müller says they are called Shawi in Algiers, that is, Nomads; and that at Tunis the name has been corrupted to Suav; whence the French Zouave. The lieutenant-general of police attached to the French expedition to Algeria addressed a communication to Marshal Bourmont containing an offer of an auxiliary corps of 2,000 of these people, Aug. 14, 1330. The offer was accepted, and a decree issued for its formation Oct. 1, 1830. A royal ordinance divided them into two battalions, composed of four companies of indigenes and two of French, Dec. 5, 1835. Gradually the enlistment of natives ceased; and the force consists almost exclusively of Frenchmen.

ZUG (Switzerland), the smallest of the cantons, joined the confederation in 1352, became a member of the new confederacy in 1815, and formed one of the seven Roman Catholic cantons which associated, under the name of the Sonderbund, against the Free Corps in 1846. The arsenal contains the banner borne by Peter Kollin, who fell fighting against the Milanese in 1422.

ZÜLLICHAU (Battle). - The Prussians, under Gen. Wedel, were defeated by the Russians, with a loss of 9,000 men, near this town of Prussia, July 23, 1759.

ZULPICH.—The name sometimes given to the battle of Tolbiac (q. v.)

ZULU CAFFRES .- (See NATAL.)

ZURICH (Switzerland), capital of the canton, and an ancient Roman station, was burned by the Helvetii when about to invade Gaul, B.C. 61. The Alemanni rebuilt it in 256. It received the jus monetie from Charles the Bald, and was walled under Otho I. Arnold of Brescia found refuge here in 1140, when he fled from Italy on a charge of heresy. The canton joined the confederation in 1351, and was engaged in 1436 in a civil war with the other cantons, which besieged it in 1444. Peace was concluded between them in 1446. The town of Winterthur was mortgaged to the canton in 1452. The reformed faith was adopted in 1523, and the sacrifice of the mass replaced by the celebration of the Lord's Supper in 1525. The French general Massena retreated from the town, leaving it in the hands of the Austown, leaving it in the lands of the state trians, June 5, 1790. He defeated the Russian general Korsakoff, when the celebrated Lavater, wishing to act as a minister of peace, stepped between the combatants, and fell dead in the street, Sep. 26. The Protestant pastors of the town, opposed to the system of education independent of the clergy, put themselves at the head of a body of peasants, and effected the dissolution of the government in 1839. The Münsterhoff, or cathedral, in the Byzantine style, was built in the 11th century; the Frauenmünster, formerly a nunnery, was founded in the 13th century; and the university, an ancient convent, in 1834.

ZURICH (Treaty).—Plenipotentiaries from Austria, France, and Sardinia, for the definite settlement of the preliminary treaty of Villafranca (q. v.), assembled at Zurich Aug. 8, 1859, and concluded a definite treaty Nov. 10, which was ratified Nov. 21. By this treaty, the whole of Lombardy, except Peschiera and Mantua, was coded by Austria to France, on condition that it should immediately be transferred to Sardinia, and a perpetual peace was established between the three contracting powers.

ZÜTPHEN (Holland).—This fortified town was acquired with the province of Guelderland, in which it is situated, by Charles I. (the Bold), Duke of Burgundy, in 1472. Sir Philip Sydney received a mortal wound, in a skirmish under its walls, when his uncle, the Earl of Leicester, made an unsuccessful attempt to take it, Sep. 22, 1586. He died Oct. 16.

ZUYDER ZEE, or SOUTH SEA (Holland), originally a lake known by the name of Flevo, was enlarged by an inundation of the sea, which separated Holland from Friesland in 1234. A body of French cavalry and artillery erossed it upon the ice in 1794, when the novel enterprise was executed of the capture of a fleet by a land force, a portion of the Dutch navy having been frozen in at the Texel. The Dutch fleet surrendered to the English admiral Mitchell here, Aug. 30, 1790.

Z W I C K A U (Saxony). — The fine Gothic

church at this place was commenced in 1453. The followers of Carlstadt (1483—Dec. 24, 1541); of Storch, a clothier of Wittenberg; of Thomas Munzer, who died in 1525; and of other Anabaptists, were in 1522 called Zwickau pro-

ZWINGLIANS, the followers of Ulrich Zwingli, or Zwinglius, who was born at Wil-denhausen, in the county of Toggenburg, in denhausen, in the county of Toggenburg, in the Swiss canton of St. Gall, Jan. 1, 1484, was ordained priest in 1506, and appointed to the parish of Glarus, where he preached against the corruptions of the Church of Rome. The court of Rome charged him with heresy, and threatened him and his disciples with excommunication, when he opposed the sale of indulgences as preacher to the monastery of Einsiedle, an appointment which he received in 1516. Zwinglius was appointed, in 1517, to a vacancy in the cathedral of Zurich. The a vacancy in the cathedral of Zurich. The Zwinglians formed a majority in the two great councils at Zurich, in Jan. and Oct., 1523. They ordered the removal of all images and ornaments from churches in 1524, and put an end to the celebration of the mass in Jan., 1525. The popish cantons having sent a force against them, defcated them at Cappel (q.v.), where Zwinglius himself led them to the field and fell, mortally wounded, Oct. 12, 1531. ZWITTAU (Battle).—The Prussians defeated the Austrians, and captured a large provision train at this place, in Moravia, Monday, July 9, 1866. ZWOLLE (Holland), merely a village till 1233, was taken by the Spaniards in 1580. The Dutch recovered it the same year, and it was captured by the French in 1672, and again Jan. 31, 1795. The Russians occupied it Nov. 12, 1813. It was much injured in 1825 by an inundation of the river Yssel.

ZYP (Battle).—Sir Ralph Abercrombie repulsed an attack of 16,000 French, under Dandaels, at this place, also called Zuyper-Sluys, in Holland, Sep. 9, 1799.

SUBJECTS NOT INCLUDED IN THE ALPHABETICAL ARRANGEMENT.

The Index does not contain every reference that is made in the book to a subject or person, but only the most important. Thus Attila occurs a great many times, but only one reference is given, to p. 499a, describing the people over whom he ruled, and the length of his regim. When several references are given under a toward, it does not follow that they all refer to the same subject. Thus, under Augusta, the first reference, p. 489, is to the sea-fight off Augusta, in Sicily, in which De Ruyder lost his tife, April 29, 1676; the second reference, p. 587a, is to Augusta, the name given to London by the Romans; the third reference, p. 820, is to Augusta, the title conferred upon the wives of the Romans Emperors; and the fourth reference, p. 887 is to Augusta, as the equivalent of the name Sebaute. The same rule applies the names of persons. Thus, the first and second references to Augustine, 84, pp. 1150 and 20%, are to 84. Augustine the Apostle of England, who was the first Archbishop of Canterbury, consecrated in 597; and the third reference, p. 383a, is to 84. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, who lived 354—Aug. 28, 430.

The Italic letter a after the figures indicates the Second Column of the page to which reference is made.
